SACRAMENTO REGION, CA (MPG) - Businessman Ken McGuire last year feared was the end of an era when the "final" Eppie's Great race was announced.

Co-founder o f Innovations Health Systems a network of heath-centered services and facilities in the Bay Area – McGuire (52) never actually competed in the annual event.

"I felt it was too great a tradition to let die," he explains. "People came here from all over the USA to compete. Eppie's was a boost for our national profile. We Sacramentans talked about the great race in the same conversation as Kings Basketball games and the California International Marathon. It helped charities. For all sorts of good reasons, keeping Eppie's alive seemed critical."

Now, thanks to McGuire, the world's oldest triathlon has not quite ended, after all. Steered by the Sacramento businessman, the contest that the late Eppie Johnston began in 1974 has new branding. From the starting gun July 20, and for future summers, it will be run as The Great American Triathlon. The endurance epic will again follow the American River Parkway in foot, bicycle Via many meetings and phone calls, McGuire persuaded major Eppie's supporters to keep paddling. In January, Sacramento County gave approval for the new parkway event.

Capital City Road Management will continue to manage the race. Former volunteers have rallied, and more than 20 companies have agreed to co-sponsor. McGuire's business partner, Carmichael resident Dan Niccum, is onboard for brand development.

The new race will continue restauranteur Eppie Johnston's philanthropic drive that raised more than a million dollars for

Hikers Need to be Prepared for Wildfire Season

By Mary K. Hanson

SACRAMENTO REGION, CA (MPG) - The second of two wildfire seasons has started in California. The first fire season is between October and April when the Santa Ana winds are most prevalent, and the second season typically runs from June through September when heat and lots of dried ground cover provide breeding grounds for the flames. This is a good time, then, to reiterate some of our tips for a fire, face the wind and hikers who are going out during the hotter summer months when wildfires can be a factor.

Before heading out, check with the local fire services for notices about possible burns or risk concerns in the area. Take the time to not only plot the course of your hike, but also to plot escape routes. Remember: getting away from the burn is more important than getting back to your car or the trailhead.

Tell friends and family where you're going and when you expected to be back, so they'll know where to direct emergency personnel to start looking if you don't come move along areas that home on time.

Bring something shiny with you, like a mirror, to signal with if you're trapped by the fire. Wear bright clothing, so you're easy to spot at a distance or from above. Don't wear synthetic clothing, as synthetics can melt directly onto your skin if the fire overtakes you.

Watching for signs of fire is another good acrid scent of smoke or heat on an already hot day seeing smoke are obvious indicators that a fire is nearby. If you see ash or sparks in the air, it means the fire is probably less than a mile away from you and you should take immediate measures to safely leave the area. Even small fires can loom large in just a short amount of time, so don't underestimate the danger of tiny floating sparks.

When trying to escape move downhill whenever possible. Remember, heat rises, so fire will run up the side of a hill or embankment much quicker than it will move down it. Moving down into shadier areas also moves you down into spots where streams and ground water may help to keep the plant-cover moister. Also be aware of the plant life around you. Some plants are highly flammable: manzanita, for example. Its roots are shallow and vulnerable to heat, and the bark is thin and peels off with age, so it offers the shrubs little protection from wildfires.

Whenever possible, won't provide the fire with any additional tinder, such as wide dirt trails or fire breaks, paved roads, or rocky and gravelly areas.

Some believe that going back over areas that have already been burned may provide some protection because the fuel there has already been consumed. Be aware, however, that such areas defense against getting may still be extremely tuleyome.org.

trapped by a wildfire. The hot to walk on, and extra is not your friend. Also, some fire-remnants can often smolder deep in the root cavities of the burned shrubs and trees and can reignite without warning.

> If you do find yourself trapped by the fire, and you can't get out into a large water source (such as a deep stream or lake) do NOT douse your clothes with water. If the fire reaches you, it can cause the water on your clothes to super-heat and turn to scalding steam.

> If the fire is going to overtake you, find a relatively clear space on the ground, pull up any weeds or brush you can, and create a shallow depression to lie in. The bigger the space you can clear for yourself, the better. Take off your backpack but keep it nearby in case you need to use it as a heat shield. Then lay face-down in the depression with your feet in the direction of the fire.

> As horrifying as being trapped by a wildfire may seem, keep in mind that if one does overtake you, it may pass over you in less than a minute or so.

the pageant, I shouldered my camera bag. I planned to stop here and there on the two-mile route to do pictures. Among 90 parade units I was an unregistered tag-along. Though no one expected me, I was welcomed with whistles and holiday goodwill. However, a mustachioed Keystone Kop did ticket me for "impersonating a pedestrian." He fined me one hug.

I guess decorating a bike for a parade was once a rite of passage for American kids. These days, they have iPhones instead. On that day, nobody but this immigrant (of a certain age) bestrode such a chariot of Americana. I was a bigger novelty than the pirate galleon's simpering mermaids.

Along the route, neighbors waved in wonderment; children yelled "I want that bike" and whenever I stopped, people demanded selfies with velocipede soon took on a parade. If I live, that is. life of its own.

Having too much fun, As I had to photograph I circled back behind the Congressman (he called: "Susan, is that you?" in astonishment) and I rode the slow-moving pageant several times. What a ham.

> Mark Twain suggested everyone should ride a bicycle: "You will not regret it," he said. "If you live."

When I at last reached Carmichael Elks, I handed my camera to friend Betty and told her to snap me waving like Princess Charlotte. I pedaled past a vintage milk truck and wielded one last salute. The treacherous handlebars turned on me. Bike and I toppled into the gutter. Oooh, cried the crowd. Ouch, cried I. Grazes everywhere. We won't publish that picture.

I rode home with a skewed mudguard squeaking against my tire. On California Avenue, a man in a wife-beater tee-shirt looked up from his barbecue and hollered: "Hell, yeah!" Bruises and all, I won't

American Beauty

We live in an era of public ugliness, of architects who deliberately make their forms unsightly and inhuman, and of public art installations that are invariably ridiculous.

The most obvious exception is the ballpark, which has gotten more beautiful rather than less in a great example of renewal through a return to tradition. the "terrace" in left field; Tiger Stadium, quirky and cozy (a flagpole stood in the field of play in deep center); and especially the "jewel boxes" of Fenway, Wrigley

Paul Goldberger, a former architecture writer for The New York Times, traces this journey in his wonderful new book "Ballpark."

He rightly calls the ballpark "one of the greatest of all American building types" and argues that "as much as the town square, the street, the park, and the plaza, the baseball park is a key part of American public space."

Ballparks went from delightfully peculiar structures shoehorned into city streets, to monochromatic multiuse facilities with all the charm of public-works projects, before rediscovering the old forms.

The first ballpark was built in Brooklyn in 1862 and called "Union Grounds." Amazingly enough, "The Star-Spangled Banner," not yet the national anthem, was played before the first game. The wooden parks of the 19th century tended to burn down, sometimes spectacularly (a fire at the South End Grounds in Boston took out 200 buildings in Roxbury).

The 20th century brought the age of steel, brick and concrete, and "the Golden Age" of 1912-14. It gave us Crosley Field, where the Reds played until 1970, with an upward slope known as the "terrace" in left field; Tiger Stadium, quirky and cozy (a flagpole stood in the field of play in deep center); and especially the "jewel boxes" of Fenway, Wrigley and Ebbets.

Subsequent decades brought a flight from cities, and from idiosyncrasy. Cleveland previewed what was to come in the 1930s with its publicly funded, gargantuan, usually half-empty, symmetrical, multisport Municipal Stadium, or the "Mistake by the Lake."

The truly dreadful, indistinguishable concrete doughnuts, made for football and baseball but manifestly unsuited for the latter, arrived beginning in the 1960s.

The turning point was Camden Yards in Baltimore, opened in 1992. Originally conceived as another multisport suburban facility, it instead decisively moved baseball beyond such hybrids. Camden Yards has a red-brick exterior and exposed steel supports inside, eschewing the concrete of the doughnuts. It limits foul territory to bring ground-level seats closer. The stands are arranged asymmetrically to avoid a deadening sameness, and frame a view of the Baltimore skyline, anchoring the park in the city.

It was such a triumph that its retro style has become a design cliche. Its influence stamped the best of the new parks: PNC Park in Pittsburgh, which, outside of Fenway and Wrigley, might be the most charming place to watch a game in the country; Oracle Park in San Francisco, which is everything its execrable forebear, Candlestick, wasn't; T-Mobile Park in Seattle, which is enchanting despite a retractable roof.

Goldberger writes of how the ballpark, with its lush field at the center of an enclosure of concrete and steel, is the garden in the city, a sports combination of the Jeffersonian agrarian tradition and the Hamiltonian emphasis on cities and industry.

It's a wonder we managed to mess it up, but we did, before the current revival that shows there's always a way back.
