One last look of the Twin Towers and the New York City skyline from the Staten Island Ferry just a few months prior to 9/11. Photo by Paul V. Scholl

The Call

It was a very deep sleep. After working a long night and into the early morning hours, I was

The telephone kept ringing and ringing. "Hello".

"Are you watching the TV? You are not going to believe what's happening."

They knew I traveled often to New York City to teach classes, going there three to four times a year for week-long trips. They knew I had many friends and students there.

The first televised scenes were absolutely awful, knowing how many people in my life lived near the scene and worked within just a few blocks of the Twin towers.

As I watched the atrocity unfold with the rest of the world I thought I was watching friends being burned to death. I thought I was watching people I loved and cared for deeply being crushed under the weight of those falling buildings.

As with the rest of the nation, the thoughts were that there are ten of thousands of people in those buildings right now! That they weren't filled with workers that morning is in itself a miracle.

Days went by wondering who had been killed or in the very least deeply affected by the act of war. Unable to reach anyone by telephone, it was sit, and wait, and pray.

Some of my friends were emergency workers and were on the scene at Ground Zero. It took months for them to even be able to talk about it. They were never the same, with "life" being taken out of them. Those relationships are all but gone.

In May of the following year I made one more trip to New York to offer my grief counseling services to any and all friends and students. We had a few group sessions where the impact of that day was as certain as an Upper Eastside rush hour.

For about two years prior to 9/11 I had recurring dreams where I was in a large city, covered in soot and smoke and could feel the rumbling of the street under me. I was helping someone who was traumatized from an accident or something. I had thought it was a future scene from being in San Francisco after a big earthquake. That seemed plausible, as I had been through a number of California quakes, including the last big one in 1989. I must have had the dream two dozen times, the same dream, over and over.

After 9/11 those dreams stopped. It was then I realized I had witnessed the horror through the eyes of my friends months in advance.

One of my friends, John, a steward on one of the Staten Island ferries, met with me for lunch many years later in downtown Sacramento. He was on his way to moving permanently to Seattle. To hear his story of being on the ferry in the middle of the bay watching the towers as they fell was beyond moving. He just couldn't take living in the City anymore.

This day in history seems now to be a footnote. To me, it's personal. It was the day the world changed forever, and not for the good. It is one of the driving forces that leads me to bring commentary to the readers of my newspapers that hopefully educates them to what is really happening in our country and what is being done by our government to restrict the populace of our great nation.. All in the name of terrorism.

Our country is asleep. SAFE is killing us. The patriot is the enemy and the enemy is glorified. The game continues. There is more than one "blue pill".

We stop looking for the truth because we want to finish the next level of some stupid video game. We stop looking for the truth because our favorite team is on T.V. in five minutes.

We stop looking for the truth because if we find it we will have to deal with it. We will actually have to become personally responsible and force a change from this path of a rotting nation and become better neighbors, co-workers and friends.

9/11 should be an annual wake up call for every American to re-dedicate themselves to bettering our community and our nation for ourselves, our loved ones, and the future Americans yet unborn.

We have a greatness within us. 911 should not be a distress call, but a wake up call from a long and very deep sleep.

Natural Pest Control

Pest control is always on any gardener's mind. In todays environmentally conscious world, organic pest control is of major interest. Organic Pest control includes prevention, biological control and organic pesticides.

Prevention:

Prevention includes choosing what you grow to reduce potential problems. It includes things like growing mildew resistant rose varieties, nematode resistant tomatoes, planting so there is a lot of air movement around your plantings to reduce fungus disease and insect populations (this allows predator insects to get at the pest.).

Sanitation is also an important part of prevention. By reducing the chance of infestation you reduce the incidence of disease. Don't use diseased or insect ridden garden materials in compost piles, Clean up all dropped fruit and flowers and get rid of old rose foliage after the winter prune.

Pest Predator:

The most important of these are: Ladybugs, Praying Mantis, Lacewings, Beneficial Nematodes, Encarsia Wasp and Predator Mites. Lady bugs can work in Aphid control, Praying Mantis eat larger flying insects, Lacewings control Aphid and similar insects. Beneficial Nematodes kill grubs in the soil, Predator Mites control two Spot Mite and Encarsia Wasp control Aphid and Ash White Fly.

Lady bugs and Praying Mantis are available during the spring. The rest may be ordered on line. My personal favorite for Aphid control are Encarsia Wasp. These are minute wasps about the size of fine ground pepper and they lay an egg in an Aphid and eat them from the inside. Best of all is they permanently establish themselves.

Organic Pesticides:

Organic Pesticides include natural materials such as Horticultural Oils to control sucking insects such as Scale, White Flies and Aphid. Oils also control many insect eggs when applied in winter.

Natural materials also include Copper, Sulfur and Lime Sulfur used as fungicides. These are best used as preventatives rather than eradicants. There is also a new organic fungicide called Serenade (this is an extract from a special bacillus) that helps control a broad range of funguses.

The Slug & Snail control called Sluggo also comes under the category of natural materials and is generally accepted as an organic pesticide.

Other Organic Pesticides include what are called Botanicals. These are plant extracts. Nicotine has been one of the most effective; not used now because of it's extreme human toxicity. Rotenone, Pyrethrum, BT, and Neem are botanical pesticides that are available for many sucking and chewing insects.

All these pest controls are allowed under most organic gardening regimes. In any case they are easy on the environment.

How often do you crave something sweet?

While we are consuming record amounts of sugar per day and suffering the health consequences, sweet is actually an important nutrient and part of our overall balance.

American average consumes approximately 21.4 teaspoons of sugar a day. That averages 130 pounds of sugar per person per year! The American Heart Association recommends that women get no more than 6.5 teaspoons of sugar while men get no more than 9.5 teaspoons per day. Imagine sitting down to a meal and consuming 7 teaspoons of sugar at each meal! Just some of the devastating effects are high blood sugar, elevated blood pressure, diabetes, circulatory challenges, obesity, tooth decay, behavioral changes, increased triglycerides, and a contributor to chronic disease. most people are aware of the devastating effects of too much sugar, sadly, most are completely unaware of the sheer volume of sugar in their daily diets.

According to Ayurveda, when we consume more sugar than our body can metabolize, our body transforms it into Ama (toxins) which pollute our blood, tissue, and vital organs. This results in overall poor health, elimination problems, a weakened immune system, and increasing our chances of chronic diseases. By cutting out or drastically reducing your consumption of sugary foods and foods high in refined carbohydrates, you will almost certainly notice an improvement in energy, immunity and overall health.

Sweet and Sugar Are Not the Same

The first taste we develop is the taste for sweet. Of the six vital tastes, the sweet taste is actually nourishing and growth producing. It helps build and repair tissue and is the predominant energy in most foods. Sweet is primarily proteins, carbs, and fats. Nearly all staple foods, vegetable oils, nuts, sugars and syrups, dairy products, and meat are classified as sweet tasting. Provided such foods are not consumed in excess, they are nourishing, but they can also be fattening and congesting. Sweet foods can contribute to mucus formation and eventually to phlegm and coughs. So while sweet tasting foods are stabilizing, tonifying, and calming-and absolutely necessary, they are contraindicated once the optimum level of consumption is reached. We are reaching this level far faster than we realize. The surprise for most people is when you combine the total number of sweet foods AND the sugar consumed in a day, the total amount is staggering. I have worked with individuals that the amount of sweet and sugar consumed is over 85% of their daily diet. Simply modifying their sweet intake and balancing the six vital tastes has done

So while sweet foods are one thing, sugar foods are quite another. Sugar had become a game of hide and seek as it is consistently labeled creatively. Here a just a few:

wonders for their overall health

- Evaporated Cane Juice
- Barley malt syrup and energy.

- Sucrose Corn syrup
- Barley malt extract
- Corn sweeteners Malt
- Beet juice Dextrose • Malt syrup • Maltose Succanat
- Fructose Maltodextrin
- Maple syrup
- Hign frutctose corn syrup
- Invert sugar Brown rice syrup • Turbinado Sugar • Aspartame

It is important to remember, that a balance in all the six vital tastes keeps us healthy. In fact, for those seeking a boost in energy, it is often more effective to eat something very spicy that liberates stored sugars than to wolf down a chocolate bar.

At Chiropractic USA, we see all too often the toll that too much sweet consumption has on our lives. While there are a multitude of strategies to reduce our imbalance, the first is to simply be aware. Read the labels and evaluate your overall sweet consumption in a day.

• Plan your meals AND your snacks.

• Shift your diet to whole grains (the amount of grains consumed in a day should be no larger than your fist.), legumes, nuts and seeds, and fresh whole fruits and vegetables. This absorbs more slowly and eliminates peaks and drops in blood sugar and reduces your cravings.

- Include all six colors of the rainbow in your daily diet.
- Eat you main meal at lunch time and a lighter meal before 7pm.
- · Get enough rest.
- Turn off the TV (you'll move more and snack less).
- Move a minimum of 20 min every day (walking is great for everyone!). Remove nervous energy and
- sit in quiet for at least a few minutes each day while taking deep cleansing breaths.

- Having too few (and the wrong kind) of calories.
- Do not skip meals (especially breakfast)
- Eating too late
- Ignoring liquid calories
- Refrain from substituting foods
- for emotional needs

A Special Article by Tim Riley

"Dying is easy. Comedy is hard." This maxim has been around for some time, and it bears a lot of truth about the difficulty of launching successful comedy series on network television.

Peter O'Toole's washed-up actor Alan Swann uttered these words in the 1982 film "My Favorite Year." The famous quote has been attributed to many, from Edmund Kean to Groucho Marx and Joseph Stalin, though the murderous Russian tyrant is an unlikely source of humor.

New comedy series are a big

Riley Reviews

COMEDY LOOMS LARGE FOR FOX NETWORK SERIES IN FALL TV SEASON

network this fall, and yet when speaking to TV critics during the recent press tour, Kevin Reilly, president of Fox Entertainment, had not much to say, other than to answer critical questions about

In fairness, Reilly did lump the comedy "Brooklyn Nine-Nine" with the mystery-adventure drama "Sleepy Hollow," noting how "surefooted these two shows are right now, right out of the gate."

Well, this was a rare occasion when a TV network executive was not engaging in hyperbole or deception. The aforementioned shows may be two of the best new series on the schedule.

Part of the FOX strategy is to create a strong comedy block on Tuesday nights, leading off with the half-hour new series "Dads" and "Brooklyn Nine-Nine" during the eight o'clock hour and ending with returning comedies "New Girl" and "The Mindy Project."

Unlike the practice of the other major networks to launch new series during the traditional Nielsen week starting September 23rd, FOX begins a week earlier, so look for the new Tuesday night comedy block to premiere on September 17th.

The spirit of "Barney Miller" lives within the new comedy "Brooklyn Nine-Nine," set in the police workplace where a diverse group of colleagues get a new captain, Andre Braugher's Ray Holt, with a lot to prove in a farflung district in the New York borough of Brooklyn.

Evident from the pilot episode, the key to the mayhem in the Brooklyn precinct is Andy Samberg's Detective Jake Peralta, a gifted investigator with the best arrest record among his colleagues, but also a carefree goofball studiously oblivious to the usual norms.

A stickler for rules and regulations, Captain Holt's arrival

Nine-Nine precinct puts a crimp in Detective Peralta's jocular style, attempting to force him to now follow standard decorum and even wear a tie to work.

Samberg is hilarious in his efforts to not-so-subtly undermine authority while continuing to be an outstanding police officer, and his eagerness to nab crooks is fueled by a dogged competition with his comely colleague, Detective Amy Santiago (Melissa Fumero).

The ensemble comedy features interesting characters, such as Joe Lo Truglio's Detective Charles Boyle, a brilliant but bumbling workhorse who pines for the abrasive, opinionated Detective Rosa Diaz (Stephanie Beatriz), with whom he stands no chance at all.

Chelsea Peretti is the eccentric and self-absorbed civilian officer manager Gina Linetti, and the always wonderful Terry Crews is Sergeant Jeffords, a linebacker of a man who lost his nerve after his wife had baby twin girls named Cagney and Lacey.

I predict "Brooklyn Nine-Nine" is FOX's new comedy hit, but Kevin Reilly spent precious time at the press conference defending some offensive aspects of "Dads," another comedy from the creators of "Family Guy."

Seth Green and Giovanni Ribisi are two successful guys in their mid-30s whose lives get turned upside down when their inappropriate and pain-in-the-neck patriarchs move in. Gifted actors Martin Mull and Peter Riegert, playing their dads, may not save this show from early demise.

Another comedy, not scheduled until later in the fall season, is "Enlisted," an irreverent militarythemed comedy (shades of "M.A.S.H.") about three brothers on a small Army base in Florida and the group of misfits who surround them.

Geoff Stults is the natural born leader, Sergeant Pete Hill, who was on a path for a huge military career until one mistake overseas got him booted stateside, where his two younger brothers are stationed.

With its goofy, sarcastic sensibilities, "Enlisted" looks like a potential winner. It may even shape up to have some of the Army humor reminiscent of "Sgt. Bilko," the great vintage TV series starring Phil Silvers, not the middling Steve Martin movie of the same title.

The FOX team gave us a military cap emblazoned with the title of the show, but this small gift has not affected my judgment on "Enlisted." I just tell you this as a matter of full disclosure.

Now that we have run down the list of new comedies, let's focus on a show of a different nature, one that Kevin Reilly rightly described as a winner "right out of the gate."

That show, to premiere on Monday, September 16, before being moved to a Friday night slot, is "Sleepy Hollow," a modern-day version of Washington Irving's classic novel in which Ichabod Crane is resurrected and plunged 250 years into the future.

In the FOX version of "Sleepy Hollow," Tom Mison's Ichabod Crane is a Revolutionary War hero who is brought back to life in the contemporary world of the Hudson Valley, where things are different than envisioned by the Founding Fathers.

Revived alongside Ichabod Crane is the infamous Headless Horseman who is on a murderous rampage in the present-day Village of Sleepy Hollow, creating a major catastrophe for the local police force.

Of course, no one believes Ichabod's tales of America's past and dire warnings about the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, but young cop Abbie Mills (Nicole Beharie) has had her own supernatural experiences and she teams up with Ichabod to embark on a mission to stop evil.

Judging by the pilot episode, "Sleepy Hollow" looks like it will draw a fan base of the younger male demographic and those who enjoy supernatural mysteries and adventure.

Waiting in the wings for a midseason replacement is "Almost Human," a science-fiction actionpacked police procedural set 35 years in the future, when police officers are partnered with highly evolved human-like androids.

Karl Urban plays a detective who survived a horrific attack and wakes up after a 17-month coma to find he can't remember much, is outfitted with a prosthetic leg and suffers from mental atrophy and depression.

Nevertheless, instead of being on disability, he rejoins the police force, though he must be partnered, much to his displeasure, with a

I have not seen a pilot of this show, but I am already thinking "Robocop." We'll wait and see.

Serious Talk Time

Dear Dave,

My wife and I make together about $100,000 a year, almost $50,000 in an IRA and no debt except for our home. The problem is I've had several health issues lately, and we've diverted a lot of money we'd put into saving and investing toward medical bills. We also have two kids in high school who want to go to college. Do you think we should cash out the IRA to help send our boys to school? -Jeff

Dear Jeff,

You guys make $100,000, and expenses at a good instate school would be roughly $17,000 a year. If I were you, I'd trim the household budget and make the kids get to work. Look around and see what you can sell, too. There's no reason you all can't pull together and cash flow an education for these guys.

Providing an education for your kids is a noble pursuit, but you're low on money right now because of health problems and medical bills. You didn't do anything wrong to create this scenario. It was just a case of life happening. So, you shouldn't feel ashamed to sit down with your kids and say, "Okay, serious talk time. You guys know what's happened recently, so if you want to go to college, you need find a good, affordable institution and start applying for every available scholarship. You also need to plan on working after school and on weekends - now and when you're off at college - and saving money like crazy. Your mom and I will help out some, but we all have to pull together to make this happen."

Dave Says

There's a better way to do this than borrowing money and going into debt. There will be times when it's not easy, but walking around with student loans hanging over your head - or nothing set aside for retirement - is no fun, either! - Dave

Big Car Debt, Small Income

Dear Dave,

My mom has about $35,000 worth of debt from a $17,000 car and $18,000 in student loans. She makes $20,000 a year. How can she get out of this mess? Christina

Dear Christina,

No one needs a car that's worth nearly all of their yearly income. That's just ridiculous. If you listen to me on the radio, I'm sure you've already heard me say what I'm about to say now—sell the car! That will get rid of almost half her debt, then find her a little $2,000 beater to drive until she can save up for a better car

Remember this simple rule: Never buy a car that costs more than half of your annual income. Also, never go into debt to buy a car. Automobiles go down in value like a rock, and you never want that much money wrapped up in something that's depreciating.

We also have an income issue here. Your mom has to do something in the short term to get her income up and pay off debt. A part-time job nights and weekends would be a really good idea. Then, she needs to address her long-term situation with an eye toward a decent job. Whether it's more formal education or technical training in a particular field, she needs to find a career that will significantly increase her income.

- Dave

Congressman Bera calls for investment in Sacramento County infrastructure

SACRAMENTO COUNTY CA (MPG) - Congressman Ami Bera, M.D. (CA-7) called for investment in Sacramento County infrastructure recently, after touring several local transportation projects with representatives from the Sacramento County Department of Transportation (SACDOT), the Sacramento Area Council of Governments (SACOG), Operating Engineers Local 3, and Laborers Local 185. The tour featured recently completed, active, and planned transportation projects near or along Highway 50 in the Rancho Cordova area.

'Our infrastructure in Sacramento County is in dire need of improvement," said Bera. "In our region, nearly 3.4 million trips are made over structurally deficient bridges every single day and the deteriorating state of the levees is also extremely serious. These improvements need to be made, but not only will they keep our families safe, they will also put Californians back to work and reinvigorate our

Bera highlighted the Partnership to Build America Act of 2013 (HR 2084), as a smart way to make these kinds of needed infrastructure upgrades. A bipartisan bill Bera has co-sponsored, the Partnership to Build America Act, would help pay for our fast-deteriorating infrastructure like roads, bridges, and levees, without increasing the nation's debt or raising taxes. Instead, it gives companies that bring foreign earnings back to America a tax savings if they invest in a new, U.S. infrastructure fund. If passed, it would create significant American jobs in the short-term and help U.S. competitiveness in the long-

Overcoming feelings of failure and discouragement

There are songs and stories that resonate with us. These stories or songs put into words our deepest feelings. Hearing such stories and songs encourages us because we know that someone else has been where we are emotionally or spiritually.

One such story found in the Bible speaks to me about overcoming feelings of failure and discouragement. In Luke 5 Jesus is speaking the word of God to a crowd gathered on the shore of a large lake. The crowd was so large and kept pressing him toward the water so he got into one of the fishing boats moored there and had the owner push him out a little way from land. I believe this action allowed his voice to be heard clearer and farther away.

When Jesus had finished his talk, he said to the owner of the boat, "Put out into the deep water and let down your nets for a catch." To which the fisherman replied. "Master, we worked hard all night and caught nothing, but at your bidding I will let down the nets."

There it is. Here is a man who has failed and is feeling like a failure. Here is a man who has fished all night and caught nothing! He is tired! He is stressed! He has just finished cleaning up his equipment and is ready to go home and sleep or drink his discouragement away. The last thing he wants to do at that moment is to re-launch the ***** boat and fish during day light hours when he knows from experience that the fish won't be biting! Physically and emotionally he is beat. His motivation to fish is zero.

If you are human you know exactly how this fisherman feels. You've been there. You've bought the t-shirt. Perhaps your "there" right now?

There was only one person who successfully motivated this dejected fisherman to try it suddenly there was a huge catch, again. It was the person of Jesus, who challenged him with a simple request. Jesus wasn't known for his fishing expertise but he was someone that this fisherman respected and took seriously.

We all have days and moments when we lack motivation, when we just don't feel like trying "it" again. But then we read something, or hear some song on the radio or talk with someone who gives us a tiny bit of hope to keep on trying. In this case it was Jesus.

The fisherman got his equipment together, re-launched his boat and let down his nets and so many fish that his nets began to break and he had to call on another boat to assist him. Cast your net, keep trying, and believe that there is someone who can and will fill it. Jesus is that someone for me. If I keep on casting my net, doing what I know I ought to be doing, I have hope that Jesus will fill it. What is the "boat" you need to re-launch? What are the "nets" you need to cast out into deep water?

A vignette performance in Dave MacDonald's Fair Oaks show, she says, "is a small way to give back. The musical shows I did for him were an inspiration. They introduced me to theater."

Says MacDonald: "Even when these performers were beginners, everyone sensed their focus. They had masses of ambition and, more importantly, they knew their dreams would demand sacrifice. I've since seen them on Broadway stages. They are serious names in the work they love. All will all pay their own travel expenses and perform gratis. I feel humble to think their careers began with me and that they've come back for our anniversary production. It's great for my other cast members to see such success stories. It shows that dreams have no limit."
