Annual Best of Broadway Opens Soon

SACRAMENTO REGION, CA (MPG) - The 2013 season of Best of Broadway (running three September weekends at Fair Oaks Village amphitheater) will mark a special anniversary.

Forty years ago, singer/teacher David MacDonald had a Mickey Rooney moment. "I said to some friends: hey, let's do a show and raise money for needy kids," he recalls. "Through the years, we've had our ups and downs (losing $33,000 worth of sound equipment to theft this year was a stellar downer) but we've always managed to pull through. When I die, I hope they'll still be staging the show."

Auditions for the 2013 production were held last month. An annual challenge, says MacDonald, is finding enough willing males to ensure the 100-plus cast is not an all-girl affair. "We always need men - singers and dancers," says the director. "Perhaps males get so involved in careers they forget their artistic side. We still need it. My best veteran (Sacramento State dance instructor Randy Solorio) started with me when he was 15. He's been in most of my 40 shows."

For 2013, segments from "Les Miserables," "Phantom of the Opera," and "The Civil War" will be featured among 60 numbers. With 40 years of precedents, MacDonald will repeat production numbers that got best audience response. The producer nevertheless reserves the right to surprise. His first act will conclude with an edgy number from a 1970s show ("Hard Job Being God"), which interprets the Old Testament as a rock opera.

If not exactly American Idol, Sacramento's Best of Broadway

series annually plucks talented artists from obscurity and drops them center-stage. Its biggest success has been in springboarding the careers of numerous distinguished alumni: actress Molly Ringwald and Broadway lead Teal Wicks hatched from the show's amateur ranks. "About 75 of my people have gone on to be on stage professionally," MacDonald boasts. "I sent out messages asking some to be in the 40th show."

At least one hot cruise ship dancer will hoof it to shore.

Golfers and Sponsors Needed for Tournament Supporting At-Risk Youth

Golfers and sponsors are needed to help support a program proven to reduce youth violence

SACRAMENTO REGION, CA (MPG) - Every year in Sacramento County hundreds of students are expelled from school because of involvement in on-campus violence. In order for these students to be readmitted to their schools, especially in cases reaching the court system, they must successfully complete a sanctioned violence prevention program. Project SAVE (Safe Alternatives and Violence Education) is one such program.

The mission of Project SAVE, operated by the Sacramento County Office of Education (SCOE), is to reduce youth violence and weapons possession through strong partnerships with local agencies. The mission emphasizes that weapons possession and violent behavior are unacceptable, especially on school grounds. Since 1998, Project SAVE has served more than 2,500 young people in Sacramento County. Nine out of ten participants remain violence-free after participating in the program.

El Camino Football Season Opens

By Ben Barber

CARMICHAEL, CA (MPG) - The El Camino Eagles had their first game of the season this last Saturday against the Oakmont Vikings, and while the schedule might have had "scrimmage" in parenthesis, the athletes were at 110%. The first game of the year is always a scrimmage allowing coaches, athletes, and referees to dust off the cobwebs and familiarize themselves with any new rules. Free flying flags and gentle warnings draw boundaries in the sand before the heat of battle meets Friday night lights where the stakes are high and local bragging rights are on the line.

With no official score being kept and a running clock of two 30 minute halves, Coach Adam Reinking was pleased with the 4 touchdowns they were able to score with the 28 offensive plays they were able to execute. Malik Stewart raised a few eyebrows with his breakout speed, a feat matched only by his voracious appetite. Nick Mirkovich showed the coaches a new gear previously not seen during summer conditioning, strengthening an already hefty defense, and providing much needed support to the back field.

The Eagles have worked hard all summer preparing for the upcoming season, spending countless hours on the field, in the weight room, and fund raising to make it all possible. The program prides itself in molding the next generation of young men to join the community by providing structure and activities year round, creating a better chance at success for student athletes as they prepare for their next steps in life.

Visit the El Camino Football website at www.ecfootball.org to find times and dates for the upcoming season, as well as vote for the team for the various televised "Game of the Week" segments provided by local broadcasters.

CARMICHAEL, CA (MPG) - Following its founder's retirement, one of Sacramento's longest-serving child day care centers has appointed a new principal. After 45 years, Wonder-Land Christian Preschool and Daycare founder Nancy McCreery retired early this summer. Educator Carrie Powers recently took the reins.

With 60 children enrolled at the Carmichael school -- and room for more -- Wonder-Land begins a new year with few changes planned. "It's not just a daycare facility," says Powers. "There's real warmth about the place." Raised in Redding, CA, 50-year-old Powers was previously a children's pastor and teacher at Bayside Church, Citrus Heights.

"The Wonder-Land staff really cares about children's spiritual and social development," approves Powers. "Their care makes me feel we fill a need in our community."

Wonder-Land is located within the American River Community Church at 3300 Walnut Avenue, Carmichael. For information, visit: www.wonder-landschool.com

Labor Day Travel Surge

Over 3.9 Million Californians to Travel, Biggest Increase This Year

The latest travel forecast predicts that more than 3.9 million Californians will travel 50 miles or more from their homes this upcoming three-day Labor Day weekend.

SACRAMENTO REGION, CA (MPG) – The upcoming three-day Labor Day holiday is predicted to reflect a significant increase from last year's holiday, according to AAA Northern California's most recent travel survey.

The latest travel forecast predicts that more than 3.9 million Californians will travel 50 miles or more from their homes this upcoming three-day Labor Day weekend. This represents an overall increase of 6 percent compared to last year. "This resurgence of travel is partly due to improved consumer confidence, which is at a much higher level than 2012," said AAA Northern California spokesperson Cynthia Harris. "Although there are lingering budgetary concerns, Californians will not let this last opportunity to celebrate summer go back without a quick holiday getaway."

This year Labor Day trips by automobile will be the preferred mode of transportation with more than 3.1 million Californians driving to reach their destinations. This represents a 6.2 percent increase compared to 2012. More than 514,000 Californians are planning to travel by air, an increase of 4.4

percent compared to last year. Approximately 300,000 state residents are expected to travel by other modes of transportation, such as rail, bus and watercraft. This represents an increase of 6.1 percent over 2012.

Nationally, just over 34 million people will travel 50 miles or more during the Labor Day weekend, representing a 4.2 percent increase compared to 2012.

AAA's survey shows that visiting family and friends, dining, shopping, and visiting beach/waterfront areas will be the preferred leisure activities for West Coast families. Other favorite activities over the weekend are expected to be biking, hiking and sightseeing.

The San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge will be closed in both directions Labor Day Weekend in order to take the original East Span out of service and to open the new East Span to traffic. The closure will begin Wednesday, August 28th at 8:00 p.m. and the new East Span is scheduled to open on Tuesday, September 3rd at 5:00 a.m.

Tips for Stress-Free Road Travel

- Plan Ahead. Carefully consider your route to determine departure and arrival times, taking into account the expected higher level of congestion on the roads.

- Take Transit, Telecommute, or Carpool. If possible, avoid driving between the East Bay and San Francisco during the closure. Instead, take public transit or try telecommuting. Several transit operators will provide enhanced or augmented services during the closure.

- Form a Carpool. Take advantage of HOV lanes (High Occupancy Vehicle lanes).

- Use Detour Routes. For those who must drive, use alternate bridges as detour routes for transbay travel.

- Get Current Traffic Conditions. Stay up-to-date on current traffic conditions and driving times by visiting the 511 Traffic page or call 511 and say either "traffic conditions" or "driving times" from the Main Menu. During the closure, 511 will automatically exclude the Bay Bridge and instead provide driving times for the fastest alternative routes.

These projections are based economic research and research by HIS Global Insight. AAA has been reporting on holiday travel trends for more than two decades.

Cheers. Carmichael mayoral opponents Virginia Stone (left) and Annie Marszal toast each other over the tea cups.

Mayoral-Tea for Two

Reporting from the campaign

CARMICHAEL, CA (MPG) – So much for nasty politics. In bipartisan accord, mayoral candidates Virginia Stone and Annie Marszal last week sat down to English tea and cucumber sandwiches.

Though both women covet the Honorary Mayor's chain, such meetings reflect the friendly nature of campaigning in unincorporated Carmichael. Indeed, the rivals found plenty in common for chit-chat: Annie's grandmother lives at Carmichael Oaks senior residence, where Virginia works; Virginia often stops for gas at Carmichael Chevron, whose business Annie represents.

The annual mayoral race is a fundraiser for the Carmichael Chamber of Commerce. The mayor has no political power but is a figurehead at civic events and active in Chamber interests. Current Honorary Mayor is SMUD executive Esteban Nava. Wannabes can still enter the race. Candidates must be Chamber members and should live or work in Carmichael. The 2013-14 winner – to be announced in November – will be decided by his or her fundraising efforts for the benefit of Chamber and community.

Candidate Virginia Stone was introduced in last week's Carmichael Times. Learn about candidate Annie Marszal on Page two of this edition

Sept 19 Audubon Meeting To Feature Birds of Sierra

CARMICHAEL, CA – (MPG) The public is invited to Sacramento Audubon's September 19 meeting featuring a virtual transect of the Sierra Nevada, a chance to see and hear the birds that live in the varying habitats from the Sierra foothills up through the western forests and over the peaks to the Great Basin.

Here is a chance to see and hear the birds that live in the habitats of the Sierra Nevada.

Beedy has taught ornithology

Pandolfino is president of Western Field Ornithologists and a regional editor for National Audubon's North American Birds.

By Ronnie McBrayer

The first Labor Day celebration was observed in New York City in 1882. It was not intended to be the official end of summer. It was a movement to honor "the contributions workers have made to the strength, prosperity, and well-being of our country." A bit more than a decade later, Labor Day became a national holiday.

Not many years later, it became evident that the American worker was such an exceptional and efficient creature, work hours would soon be reduced to mere shadows of their former oppression. For example, economist John Maynard Keynes, in the teeth of the Great Depression, predicted that technological advancements would soon lead to a 15-hour work week.

In the mid-1960s, congressional leaders boldly predicted a two-day work week by the year 2000. That prediction has apparently only rung true for congressional leaders, as the average time workers spend on the job has ballooned over the years to nearly 50 hours per week.

Meanwhile, it is well known that our peers in Europe and other "developed" countries, enjoy bountiful quantities of leisure time (on average, putting in 400 fewer annual work hours than Americans), while enjoying equal levels of productivity. Working more hours simply hasn't translated to greater production or higher levels of satisfaction, and the predictions of "less work, more rest" is a farce for today's laborers.

And while we mostly recognize the need to protect our health by eating right, staying hydrated, exercising, and the like, Americans are notorious for ignoring the body's need for intentional times of rest. More so, we ignore our mental, emotional, and spiritual need for rest.

In the book of Genesis, the ancient writer says that on the final day of the first week, God rested. Was God tired? No, God set an example by abstaining from his creative work, and pausing to enjoy it.

The word for rest, used in those Genesis accounts, can be translated "to soulify" or "to enhance one's soul." More practically it means "to catch one's breath" or to "renew the spirit." So when we pause to catch our breath, to renew our spirit, or recharge our souls, it is an imitation of God - it is worship.

Lettie Cowman, a devotional writer from a century ago, illustrates this so well with one of her stories from Africa. She wrote about an Englishman who was exploring the deepest jungles of the continent, traveling like British royalty. He had brought with him fine wines, his favorite foods, tons of books and parchments, furniture, and clothing.

He had so much that he had to hire an army of strong men from the local villages to portage all this material through the jungle. On the first day of his grand safari, he pushed the laborers at an exhausting, God-forsaken pace. He wanted to cover as much distance as possible, and he did exactly that.

As he lounged in his tent that evening, he concluded that if such a pace could be kept, why, he would see most of the continent, and his journey would be a quick one. But on the second morning, the hired Africans refused to move. They just sat there, and no amount of pleading, cursing, or bribery could make them move.

Finally, one of the young men explained that they were not especially tired. Rather, they had gone too far and too fast on the first day, and they had to "wait for their souls to catch up with their bodies."

Cowman concluded her story with these words of reflection (and I remind you, her words are a century old): "This whirling, rushing life which so many of us live does for us what that first march did for those poor tribesmen. But here is the difference: They knew what they needed to restore life's balance; too often we do not."

So on this weekend that marks the official end of summer, don't simply grill your burgers or down a few beers. Do less. Sit still. Take a nap. It will be an act of worship.

Whatever Happened to Those Lazy Days of Summer?

By Rev. James L. Snyder

According to my calculations, summer is half over. I'm not quite sure how this came about, but the calendar has never lied to me before. It has confused me and taunted me, but it has never lied to me.

Looking at my calendar, I can see no lazy days of summer noted anywhere in the foreseeable future. I'm not sure if this is an oversight on my part and that I should have at least penciled in one lazy day of summer, or if those lazy days of summer are a thing of the past. I sure hope it's not the latter.

I can hardly imagine a world without any lazy days of summer. It just would not be summer, in my opinion.

This probably is the price people pay for getting old. When I was young, most of my summer was filled with lazy days where I practiced the fine art of doing nothing. Oh, how I yearn for the return of those good old days of yesteryear.

Someone once told me, "Sonny, don't ever grow old." At the time, I didn't know what he meant. I assumed he was referring to his loss of hair or arthritis in his joints or forgetting things. I thought that was what it meant to grow old. He meant nothing of the sort.

Now that I am old, I understand exactly what he was warning. There is no doubt in my mind that he was bemoaning the fact that his lazy days were gone. Perhaps he was envious of the fact that at the time, I had loads and loads of lazy days on my hands. I didn't know just how rich I was.

Now I do, but it's too late. Where have all those lazy days gone?

I was whining about this to the Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage, hoping to get some empathy, at least. Instead of sympathizing with me, all she did was look at me and say in that tone of voice that I know so well, "You just want an excuse to do nothing."

To which I replied most sharply, "I don't need an excuse to do nothing, all I need is an opportunity."

Thinking about what I said, I discovered there was more wisdom in that one sentence than anything else I have ever said. I had to sit in the corner for a few moments recovering from the shock of saying something with wisdom in it. I probably say many things with wisdom in it without even thinking. In fact, I'm good at saying many things without thinking.

Although I may not be good at many things, I have mastered the art of doing nothing. I can do nothing better than I can do anything. Of course, I don't have too many opportunities to do anything; I have more opportunities to do nothing. If I had my choice, I would rather do nothing than anything.

My philosophy is simply this: Why be good at nothing and not put it to good use?

I have invested a lot of time and energy into doing nothing, and I'm concerned that not by having an opportunity to do nothing, I might forget the finesse associated with that art.

I don't get a chance very often to do nothing, so I'm anxious to practice the skills associated with nothing. In this regard, my calendar has not been very cooperative. Where are those lazy days of summer where I can do nothing?

Not only has my calendar not been cooperative, but my wife has been the epitome of obstruction in this pursuit of mine. Just when I think a lazy day is looming on the horizon, she comes up with something for me to do. Even though all I wanted to do was nothing, she insists that I do something for her. Either I do her something or else. I do not want to do her or else for nothing.

Those lazy days of summer were the perfect opportunity to perfect the fine art of doing nothing. Regretfully, I have to honestly face the fact that those times are far behind me. No more lazy days of summer for me. At least not as many as there used to be.

The old preacher in Ecclesiastes was right when he said, "To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven." (Ecclesiastes 3:1 KJV).

I can look back with a sense of satisfaction and know that when I did have those lazy days of summer, I put them to good use and developed skill in doing nothing. I know that before me are some days when I will not have the strength or energy to do anything. Then my ability to do nothing will come in good use.

I think it is quite important to live in the time at hand. The apostle Paul understood this when he wrote, "And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep: for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." (Romans 13:11 KJV)

Now that I'm older (and who's to say how much older I will get), I can say with a good deal of expertise: Never grow old. By that I mean, never forget those lazy days of summer.

Bankruptcy Just For Her?

Dear Dave,
 My husband and I would like to buy a home in the next year or so. My credit is in pretty bad shape, so we've decided to work on getting his credit in better shape in order to qualify for a mortgage loan. I have $104,000 in debt, and $92,000 of that is in student loans. He has $13,000 in debt, with $7,000 of that a repossession on a car for which he was a co-signer. Can I file bankruptcy on my debts only?
 - Latrell

Dear Latrell,
 You can't file bankruptcy on certain, specific items. By the way, student loans are not bankruptable. Even if you filed, you would still have all that debt hanging around your neck.

I want you to own a home, but I don't want your home to own you. Neither one of you have done very well with money so far, and at this point I'm afraid a house would be a curse instead of a blessing in your lives. I would encourage you to build a stronger financial foundation before you buy a house. In short, this means you need to get out of debt, save money, and start living on a budget.

Latrell, buying a house when you're broke and deeply in debt is never a good idea. I'm not trying to be mean, but I really think you're asking the wrong question. I don't want you to try and use bankruptcy as some kind of escape from this situation. Right now, I want you to change your behavior with money and get things cleaned up with a good, organized financial plan in your lives.

 - Dave

The Ever-Changing Budget

Dear Dave,
 Should a budget change every month?
 - Anonymous

Dear Anonymous,
 Yes, it should. Your life changes every month, and your budget should reflect the ebb and flow of your life.

Now, some things will stay the same. Your house payment or rent should fall into this category. If you have a car payment, which I hope you don't, that would be the same too. There shouldn't be a big difference in the amount you spend on food most months though. You might spend more in this category during November and December thanks to the holidays, but overall it should remain pretty steady.

The biggest fluctuation you may see is in your utilities. I heat my house with natural gas, so the bill is much higher during the winter months. It's just the opposite during the summer. We burn electricity to run the air conditioner, so the electric bill is higher in summer.

This is part of the reason I urge people to do a budget on paper, on purpose before the next month begins. You may look at the upcoming month and realize the kids have soccer pictures scheduled. There may be a school trip planned, or they may need back-to-school clothes and supplies.

When it comes to a budget, there's no easy out. Things change from month to month, and you need to think, plan ahead, and itemize so your budget is an accurate reflection of your life!
 - Dave

GMY Phone Scam Dials in on Older Adults

BBB warns to never give out bank account numbers to callers

SACRAMENTO REGION, CA (MPG) - Better Business Bureau Serving Northeast California warns older adults to hang up on phone calls claiming to be from a company calling itself GMY after an Elk Grove woman received several phone calls from the company requesting bank account information.

The Elk Grove woman grew suspicious of phone calls her elderly mother was receiving as early as 6 a.m. when she intervened in the communication.

"When I got on the phone, they tried to convince me my mother would be receiving a card to pay for her medical care," said the woman. "They went on to ask for her bank account numbers.

I wouldn't give them any information when they refused to tell me their phone number or company name."

The woman eventually spoke to someone identified as a supervisor who told her the company name was GMY. Consumers from across the country have reported similar scams in which the same company name is utilized. In other calls, the company may claim to be working with Medicare to issue new cards.

"It doesn't matter who claims to be on the phone; do not give unsolicited callers your bank account or social security numbers," said Gary Almond, president of BBB Serving Northeast California. "Always make sure you are speaking with a trustworthy person and business before taking the conversation any further."

To avoid this and similar scams, BBB offers the following tips:

Do not give personal information to unsolicited callers.

The government does not call, text or email. Also, the government should already possess the necessary information and should not ask for your social security number or address.

Do not accept free medical services or equipment in exchange for your Medicare number.

Identify real Medicare providers. Call 1-800-MEDICARE or TTY at 1-866-653-4261.

Paintings by First Graders on Display at State Capitol

Carmichael Students Participate in Inaugural Art Program

SACRAMENTO REGION, CA (MPG) - In an effort to encourage children's imagination and creativity, State Senator Jim Nielsen (R-Gerber) introduced the State Capitol's first Students Art Program. The beautiful water paintings of flowers from Mrs. Lisa Geremia's First Grade Class are currently on display in Nielsen's Capitol office.

"Art has so many positive benefits," said Sen. Nielsen. "Studies have shown that art stimulates and develops the imagination and critical thinking of students. It helps refine their cognitive and creative skills."

Nielsen added, "I want to support teachers' and parents' effort to encourage children's imagination and creativity."

Inspired by his family's passion for the arts, Nielsen developed this program to celebrate the creative talents of students. Guests and visitors are greeted by the use of brilliant colors with varying hues of purple, blue, yellow and orange that adds warmth to the office.

Located in Carmichael, Del Dayo Elementary School is a neighborhood school where educators and parents collaborate to develop a lifelong love of learning.

"The teachers at Del Dayo Elementary School pride ourselves in encouraging our students' creativity. Sen. Nielsen's Art Program is a unique opportunity for the students to show their artwork," Mrs. Geremia said.

Teachers who are interested in participating should contact Sen. Nielsen's office at NielsenDistrict4@sen.ca.gov.

Martin Luther King's Dream and the Declaration of Independence

Commentary By Dr. Michael Coulter

August 28 marks the 50th anniversary of the 1963 March on Washington. Martin Luther King Jr.'s speech at that great rally is rightly honored as one of the greatest speeches in American history. All Americans recognize the soaring rhetoric of the final portion of the speech, where King speaks of a dream of an America without legal discrimination or racial prejudice. But the first part of that speech, wherein King speaks of the Declaration of Independence and Constitution, is not as well-known but deserves to be. That portion demonstrates King's commitment to the conception of justice held at the American founding.

In the third paragraph of King's text, he says that "when the architects of our Great Republic wrote the magnificent words of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, they were signing a promissory note to which every American was to fall heir." With this reference to the declaration, there is a clear echo of that other great American speech from 100 years before King's March on Washington speech: Lincoln's Gettysburg address, which speaks of America as "dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

A "promissory note" is not one of those terms we use frequently, but it's a powerful term. It's not a hope or a wish. In fact, there was an international agreement in 1930 which defined a promissory note as implying an unconditional promise. For King, the Declaration of Independence, which he quoted directly from, was a promissory note that the United States would ultimately guarantee for all people "the unalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." As King then said, "It is obvious that America has defaulted on this promissory note." King was not calling for the destruction of the American political order, but rather for us to be true to the ideals of the founding, and that's why it is important that he quoted the Declaration.

It is more than reasonable to assume that King could have been so disheartened by the treatment of blacks in the United States that he would have rejected the proposition that the United States had the capacity to correct past wrongs and ultimately be true to the Declaration's claim about the equality of rights for all people. Instead, he said that "we refuse to believe that the bank of justice is bankrupt." It is interesting to contrast this with someone like Howard Zinn, author of "The People's History of the United States," a widely assigned textbook that portrays oppression as central and unending in American history, who seemed to believe that America had no capacity for respect for rights and could never improve. King added that "we refuse to believe that there are insufficient funds in the great vaults of opportunity in this nation." For nearly all individuals, it doesn't take more than one or two unfulfilled promises made by another to result in giving up on the possibility of working with that person or group. Despite the unfulfilled promise of the protection of rights and the protection of freedom, King hadn't given up on America.

Finally, at the end of King's speech is a beautiful sequence where he presents images of a truly post-racial society—and there again is one more reference to the Declaration of Independence. As he begins this "dream" section, he says: "I still have a dream. It is deeply rooted in the American dream. I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up, live out the true meaning of its creed: We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal."

King's hopes were rooted in that powerful second paragraph of the Declaration of Independence that claims that no man by nature is ruler or the servant of another. It's not just a great statement during a social struggle, it's a great statement about what it means to be an American.
