PG&E Suspension of Service Disconnections Extended

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA (MPG) - Pacific Gas and Electric Company (PG&E) announced recently that it will extend the moratorium on utility service disconnections through September 30, 2021. The moratorium was put in place in March 2020 by the California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC).

“We believe extending the service disconnection moratorium for all customers allows for additional relief efforts from the state to take shape while protecting our customers who are financially struggling,” said Marlene Santos, PG&E Executive Vice President and Chief Customer Officer.

As part of the company’s ongoing efforts to help customers manage their bills, PG&E will auto-enroll eligible customers in new extended payment plans by the end of September to coincide with the potential ending of the moratorium.

While the moratorium has been extended, other emergency customer protections put in place by the CPUC during the pandemic have expired.

Recertifications and Post-Enrollment Verifications for the California Alternate Rates for Energy (CARE) and Family Electric Rate Assistance (FERA) programs have resumed. CARE/FERA customers whose program eligibility would have expired between March 4, 2020 and June 30, 2021 will be required to re-certify. Customers whose program eligibility expired on or after July 1, 2021 will be required to recertify within 90 days. The earliest a customer may be removed from CARE/FERA is October 1, 2021 after a series of direct mail and targeted email communications.

PG&E has helped almost 300,000 residential customers enroll in CARE since February 2020 providing income-qualified customers with a monthly discount.

In addition, Medical Practitioner Certifications for the Medical Baseline Program have resumed. Active Medical Baseline customers who have enrolled in the program under the consumer protections and customers with non-permanent medical conditions as designated by their medical practitioners will be required to recertify for their continued eligibility. PG&E will proactively communicate with Medical Baseline customers and remind them of their upcoming recertifications.

Charity and Politics?

Elected officials would have to disclose their connections under proposed rule

By Laurel Rosenhall,
CALMatters.org

In the months before California lawmakers in June granted prison guards a $5,000 bonus and an 8% raise over the next two years, the guards’ union made a few charitable donations. The recipients included two nonprofits run by the very legislators who were preparing to vote on the pay hikes.

State senators who lead the Legislature’s Black and Latino caucuses asked the correctional officers’ union to donate to the foundations they run – and the union complied, state records show, giving $15,000 in March to the foundation run by the Latino caucus and $60,000 over February and March to the Black caucus’ foundation.

Donations like this – from groups that lobby the Legislature, to nonprofits controlled by legislators, their staff and family members – have been under scrutiny by California’s

Then-Assemblymember Rob Bonta, left, and his wife, Mia Bonta, at a press conference in March shortly before he was appointed attorney general. political watchdog since CalMatters reported last year that they’ve become an increasingly common way for politicians to raise and spend money outside the limits of the state’s strict campaign finance laws.

The investigation found a dozen nonprofits run by state lawmakers and their staffs had reported raising nearly $3 million in 2019; that a nonprofit tied to the legislature’s technology caucus was keeping its donations secret; and that a lawmaker – now-Attorney General Rob Bonta – routinely asked interest groups to donate to his personal foundation as well as to nonprofits that employed his wife.

The money largely comes from corporations and unions with business before the Legislature, who can get a tax break for giving to charity while also currying favor with influential politicians. While the nonprofit recipients may perform charitable work, they also pay for lawmakers to take trips abroad, enjoy steak dinners with tech executives in Silicon Valley and spend weekends schmoozing with lobbyists at the Disneyland Hotel.

Now, after a year of reviewing whether to change the rules governing the transactions known as “behested payments,” on Thursday the Fair Political Practices Commission is scheduled to discuss new regulations:

“These are relationships that raise concerns about the self-interest of the official and the possibility of undue influence or access for the payee as a result of the payment,” the commission staff wrote in a report explaining the proposed rules. “As such, these are relationships with a potential for influence or self-dealing that the public would want to have disclosed.”

The Fair Political Practices Commission is expected to vote on the proposed rules this fall. The commission is limited in how drastically it can change the rules on behested payments, which can only be banned or significantly overhauled with legislation.

The rule requiring disclosure of official decisions that impact the donor comes with a large caveat:

It does not include legislation. That means the rule wouldn’t change anything for state lawmakers who routinely vote on bills affecting the businesses and unions they hit up for donations to their nonprofits.

Richard Miadich, chairperson of the Fair Political Practices Commission, said legislation should be treated differently because its impact is usually broad, not crafted in a way that bestows specific perks to individuals or interest groups. Asked about the example of the prison guards union donating to lawmakers’ charities just before lawmakers voted on their raise and bonus – a contract the Legislature’s own analyst described as providing “substantial compensation increases... without clear justification” – Miadich said existing disclosure is sufficient.

He does, however, want to see more transparency in situations where, for example, a city council is deciding the fate of a permit sought by a developer who makes donations to a council member’s charity.

“We need to have a balanced, deliberate approach,” Miadich said in an interview Monday. “I really believe that behested payments do a lot of good to a lot of worthy causes. And I do not want to inadvertently interrupt that, particularly coming out of a global pandemic.”

By contrast, the rule requiring disclosure of donations to nonprofits controlled by politicians and their family members would seem to impact several elected officials at the Capitol. Gov. Gavin Newsom has reported raising $881,297 for the California Partners Project, a nonprofit run by his wife Jennifer Siebel Newsom.

Lawmakers routinely ask donors to give to nonprofits run by their legislative caucuses and in some cases, their family members. Assemblymember Blanca Rubio, a Democrat from Baldwin Park who wields significant power to kill progressive bills as the leader of a bloc of moderate Democrats, reported raising $62,000 for the Rubio Foundation, which is run by her sister Sylvia Rubio. Donors include pharmaceutical, petroleum and dialysis companies that routinely lobby at the Capitol.

“When I vote, it’s about the issue, not about who’s giving me money or who hasn’t,” Rubio told CalMatters. “And I’m very clear with them... that the one does not have to do with the other.”

Rubio pointed out that most donations she requested went to other nonprofits that were not her sister’s. The money she raised for her sister’s foundation helped put on a turkey giveaway at Thanksgiving and fund field trips for kids from a low-income school, Rubio said. She had no objections to the political watchdog’s proposed rule that would require additional disclosure from her.

“I’m happy to follow all the rules,” she said.

Bonta, a Democrat who was appointed attorney general in March, formed his own nonprofit called the Bonta California Progress Foundation in 2017, when he was an assemblyman. He reported raising $132,500 to it between 2017 and 2020 and said the money has supported dozens of scholarships for students in his district. Last year, CalMatters reported that Bonta paid $25,000 from his foundation to the nonprofit where his wife worked, and helped her employers raise more than $560,000, largely by soliciting donations from companies that lobby the Legislature. The practice is legal, but political ethics experts called it inappropriate.

Bonta’s wife Mia Bonta is now a leading candidate to replace Bonta in the Assembly in a special election on Aug. 31.

Earlier this year, Bonta stepped down from the board of his eponymous foundation and it made several new rules, said his campaign spokesman Nathan Click. “Both Bontas are prohibited by the organization from making decisions about how funds are expended,” Click wrote in a message. “Funds are prohibited from going to any organization that employs either Bonta.”

News reports in recent months have highlighted both the explosion of behested payments – with Newsom soliciting $226 million in corporate donations to support the state’s pandemic response – and the proliferation of donations to nonprofits run by political spouses.

Charities run by Annie Lam, wife of Democratic Assembly

Speaker Anthony Rendon, received more than $500,000 from companies with business before the Legislature, the Sacramento Bee reported, and a nonprofit run by Newsom’s wife received more than $800,000 from a dozen corporations that regularly lobby state government. However, those donations were not made at Rendon’s or Newsom’s “behest” so would not be covered by the new rules the FPPC is considering.

One thing the commission may consider changing is how donations are reported if they come through a donor advised fund. That’s because such funds can obscure the original source of a donation, the Los Angeles Times reported, raising concerns that donors trying to curry favor with politicians may have found a way to avoid scrutiny. The FPPC is also scheduled to discuss donor advised funds at its meeting Thursday.

The commission has not yet completed its investigation of Assemblyman Evan Low, launched after CalMatters reported that the Democrat from Silicon Valley had stopped reporting donations to the nonprofit affiliated with the Legislature’s technology caucus. rofits set up by California legislators and their staffers are testing campaign finance laws even as they underwrite good works by elected

Oregon may use National Guard for door-to-door COVID questions – Health official: ‘We’re looking to bring on a team’ | 9 July 2021 | After Joe Biden’s recent COVID move – a door-to-door visit to Americans to promote vaccines – was announced, one member of Congress openly suggested while the door knocks this year may concern COVID vaccinations, those next year might be about collecting Americans’ guns. But a report from Press California explains Oregon already is considering ways to implement Biden’s agenda, and “one tactic could be to send out the National Guard to neighborhoods.” The state actually has some 70% of its residents vaccinated, but “that’s not enough, according to zealous public health bureaucrats,” the report said. “In the state’s fourth most populous county, which includes the college town of Eugene, National Guard members may be among the teams designated to persuade people to take the shots, according to Jason Davis, Public Information Officer with Lane County Public Health,” the report explained.

CNN medical analyst: life ‘needs to be hard’ for unvaccinated Americans – Wen urged President Biden to get behind ‘vaccine credentialing’ | 10 July 2021 | CNN medical contributor Dr. Leana Wen suggested Saturday that life needs to be “hard” for Americans who have not received a[n experimental] COVID-19 vaccine and individuals who refuse to get shots should perhaps face weekly testings. “It needs to be hard for people to remain unvaccinated,” Wen, the former Planned Parenthood president, said. “Right now, it’s kind of the opposite.” Unvaccinated people, she fretted, can at the moment go about their lives as normal without any consequence.

Panetta calls on Biden to mandate COVID-19 vaccines for military | 10 July 2021 | Former Defense Secretary [deep-state nut-job] Leon Panetta said that Joe Biden should require all military members to get the COVID-19 vaccine. In an interview with Greta Van Susteren set to air on Sunday, Panetta said it was a matter of “national security.” “I frankly think the president ought to issue an order requiring everybody in the military to get a COVID-19 shot, period. That’s an issue involving our national security,” Panetta, who served under the Obama administration, said... The vaccines are under an emergency use authorization by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA). Therefore, the Pentagon cannot legally require that all military members get the vaccine, although Biden could grant an exception to this rule.

Sen. Rand Paul to Introduce Bill to Bar ‘Farce’ Mask Mandate on Planes | 11 July 2021 | Sen. Rand Paul (R-Ky.) said that he will reintroduce legislation that would bar the public transportation mask mandates on airplanes that were implemented earlier this year by the federal government. “When the Senate returns to session, I will be introducing an immediate repeal of the mask mandate on planes. Enough! Time to stop this farce and let people travel in peace!” he wrote last week on Twitter. On his second day in office, Joe Biden signed an executive order requiring that face coverings be worn when using all forms of public transportation, including inside airports and on airplanes.

Texas Investigating 386 More Cases of Voter Fraud, Attorney General Tells CPAC | 11 July 2021 | Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton told an audience at the Conservative Political Action Conference (CPAC) on July 11 that his office is investigating nearly 400 more cases of voter fraud and told audience members that concern about election fraud isn’t overblown. The 386 cases that are being investigated come in addition to more than 500 cases that his office has prosecuted, Paxton said, without elaborating on the details of some of the cases. “Do not believe the narrative because in Texas we are going to fight election fraud,” Paxton said, adding that Republicans would have struggled during election day last year if his office didn’t stop local election officials from breaking rules around balloting.

Trump easily wins CPAC 2024 GOP presidential nomination straw poll | 11 July 2021 | Former Presidentv Donald Trump easily won the 2024 GOP presidential nomination poll at the Conservative Political Action Conference (CPAC) gathering this weekend in Texas. Trump, who’s repeatedly flirted with making another presidential run in 2024 to try and return to the White House, captured 70% of ballots cast in the anonymous straw poll, according to results announced by CPAC on Sunday afternoon. That’s a boost from the 55% support he won in the hypothetical 2024 Republican primary matchup straw poll at CPAC Orlando in late February. ★

Sheriff’s and District Attorney’s Offices Investigating in Custody Death

BCSO Press Release

OROVILLE, CA (MPG) - On the evening of July 4, 2021, Butte County Sheriff’s Office Correctional Deputies were conducting routine safety checks on inmates housed at the Butte County Jail. Around 6:30 p.m., a correctional deputy discovered Inmate Madison Sall, age 45, of Chico unconscious on the bed within his cell. Upon closer examination, the deputies determined that Sall was not breathing and appeared to be having a medical issue.

Correctional deputies and jail medical staff immediately began providing Sall with emergency medical treatment. Paramedics responded and provided additional emergency medical treatment. Despite the life-saving measures that were administered, jail medical staff and paramedics were not able to revive Sall.

Butte County District Attorney’s Office Investigators and Butte County Sheriff’s Office Detectives responded to the jail and began conducting an investigation. During the investigation, personnel interviewed correctional deputies, medical staff, and inmates housed in cells adjacent to the cell occupied by Sall. To date, detectives and investigators have not located any evidence to suggest Sall committed suicide or was involved in any type of criminal violence prior to being found unresponsive. Additionally, there were no use of force incidents involving Sall and BCSO staff.

Investigators and detectives determined Sall was housed in a cell by himself and other inmates did not have access to Sall’s cell. Investigators and detectives did not locate any signs of trauma or injuries on Sall’s person. An autopsy will be conducted by the Sacramento County Coroner’s Office to determine Sall’s cause of death.

Investigators and detectives determined Sall had been housed at the Butte County Jail for several months. Sall has received extensive medical treatment since being housed at the Butte County Jail. At the time of his death, Sall was housed in the medical unit at the Butte County Jail as a result of health-related conditions. The medical unit is located next to the medical offices in the Butte County Jail which allows inmates to have immediate access to medical staff. Butte County District Attorney’s Office Investigators and Sheriff’s Office Detectives are actively investigating this incident. ★

California has a Segregation Problem

By Dan Walters
CALMatters

Deeply blue California’s top political figures, from the governor downward, portray the state as a model of multi-cultural integration.

In fact, however, as a new study from UC-Berkeley’s Othering & Belonging Institute reveals, most California metropolitan areas have high levels of racial segregation in housing and it has become more pronounced over the last two decades. Oddly, too, California’s segregation tends to be highest in areas most likely to lean to the left politically.

The Los Angeles-Long Beach-Santa Ana metropolitan area, the study found, is the nation’s sixth most segregated region of 200,000 residents or more. Other California areas with high levels of segregation include San Francisco-Oakland (25th), San Diego (38th), San Jose (45th) and Sacramento (82nd).

Of the 11 California regions on the report’s “high segregation” list, only two, Bakersfield (37th) and Fresno (72nd), hew to the right politically. The San Luis Obispo-Paso Robles area, which also is somewhat conservative politically, is one of only two regions in the nation deemed to be highly integrated, the other being Colorado Springs, which is a Republican bastion.

We’re celebrating six years of providing free, fair and accessible news that informs Californians and empowers them to engage with their state government. We couldn’t have reached this moment without our supporters. Support our mission with a donation during our birth-day month.

Okay, so California is not the exemplar of integration it often pretends to be. But isn’t the state trying to make its housing patterns more inclusive?

Officially, yes. State housing guidelines and recent legislation seek more integration of multi-family housing into what have been exclusively single-family neighborhoods as determined by local zoning laws. A mixture of housing types, it’s argued, would create more neighborhood diversity.

Those efforts, however, have faced stiff opposition in suburban communities where single-family homes predominate, with the fiercest resistance in suburbs dominated by Democratic voters, such as Marin County.

The outcome of California’s housing war remains in doubt. However, as California pursues – at least on paper – more integration in housing, it seems to be encouraging more segregation in political representation through a concept called “community of interest” or COI.

When California’s Citizens Redistricting Commission, created by a statewide ballot measure, first tackled the redrawing of legislative and congressional districts in 2011, it assumed that one of its jobs was to identify COIs and make them a dominant factor in redistricting.

The commission is just beginning to do its work again, using still-to-be-released data from the 2020 census, and is putting even more emphasis on COIs, although how to define them remains uncertain.

The current commission is staging “COI input meetings” around the state and seeking participation but admits in its latest invitation that “there are no clear rules on how to define a community of interest.”

It’s assumed that under federal law, redistricting plans must not inhibit the ability of ethnic and racial groups to elect representatives. To insulate the new maps from legal challenge, the commission will use data on concentrations of potential voters (over the age of 18 and citizens) to create “majority-minority” districts that, in effect, preordain the election of legislators and congressional members from the designated communities.

Although California’s overall population has seen only scant growth over the last decade, whites have continued to decline proportionately while Latino and Asian populations have increased. Thus, as the state’s leading redistricting expert, Paul Mitchell, has written, “it’s more likely than ever that the data will tell (the commission) there are more majority-minority districts that need to be drawn than ever in light of heightened segregation within our cities and counties.”

So on one hand, California officialdom says it wants to lessen segregation in housing, but on the other hand it wants to reinforce racial and ethnic segregation in legislative and congressional districts. That’s California in a nutshell.

Summer Jobs Left Vacant as Young People Look Elsewhere

Summer jobs on the farm for high school and college students are nowhere near as common as they once were. As a national survey shows the average age of the farm workforce going up, California farmers say young people don’t think much about farm work anymore. One farmer says he hasn’t hired a student for a summer job in several years, while another says young people aren’t as likely to have a farmer in the family.

California Melon Crop Faces Challenges

While the demand for California-grown melons is high, farmers say getting those melons to the nation’s tables has faced multiple challenges this season. These include a statewide drought impeding water deliveries; excessive heat reducing yields; a shortage of skilled on-farm employees and truck drivers; and a shortage in supplies such as pallets, bins and cardboard. The San Joaquin Valley’s west side and the Imperial Valley provide 75% of the nation’s commercially grown melons.

Agricultural Employers Say ‘Soft Skills’ are Crucial

When selecting employees, agricultural companies say that soft skills like a strong work ethic, good communication, time management and dependability are just as important as technical know-how, according to a recent survey by California State University, Fresno. Agriculture industry knowledge was the only technical skill that was on the top 10 skills listed as most important.

Roses thrive in state’s cities

When it comes to flowers, roses are among the most widely recognized. But where do they flourish? Eight California cities rank among the best in the U.S. for rose gardens, according to a recent ranking based on factors such as growing season and average summer temperature, precipitation and hours of sunlight. Fresno and Sacramento are in the top 16 cities of 50. On the farm, California rose growers produce approximately 17 million stems of cut roses and 4 million units of potted rose plants annually. ★

The Brownsville Bailiwick & Beyond

Ice cream socials at YF museum are still a good way to get out and visit people. In July the dates are July 18 and 31. Ice cream sundaes and root beer floats are available from 1 – 3. Walking through Gold Trader Flat, a replica gold rush village, is a treat, too. The village at the museum is open to visitors on weekends from noon to 4. There is a new display depicting the role of the Chinese in our area. Please come on by and support our local museum in Forbestown.

We sure hope that fireworks season lets us escape without wild fires. Yard work and camping can be dangerous, too. This season will probably be one of our worst. Vigilance is necessary!

Life is beginning to get more active as we begin to lift the “Stay at Home” mandate. It is the season for grand-kids and “greats” to come visit. Young Nicolai is at the bookstore often, visiting old friends and doing his craft projects. Keeping in touch with family members is important. Many have gotten their vaccinations and we all feel a bit safer. However, as the new variant has crept into every state, we need to stay vigilant.

~ Hope to see you in Brownsville soon.

Inflation and the Living Wage Debate

In a recent Money Matters article, I covered how the Employment Development Department (EDD) and their lucrative bonus payments to the unemployed has essentially made the national $15/hr. minimum wage debate a moot point. Another contentious debate, called the “Living Wage” debate, will likely now be turned on its head as the higher wages forced up by the EDD payments will result in exposing the vicious cycle of wage push inflation and its effect on the living wage.

Not only has the minimum wage debate been obsoleted by the EDD payments, those same payments are now causing even faster inflation in the economy than previously witnessed.

We can see this new “wage push” inflation as businesses in many instances, are offering over $15/hr. to entice potential workers to get off the couch and come back to work.

As inflation takes off, I have seen more and more commentary stating that the $15/hr. rate, which was previously determined by some to approach the so-called “living wage”, is now grossly insufficient as consumer prices skyrocket.

There is a reason why what once was determined to be at least close to a sufficient living wage is now quickly being dismissed as grossly deficient. Plainly put, an economic reality is occurring.

Although higher wages are not the sole cause for higher consumer prices, higher wages coupled with the recent spike in commodity prices are crippling business balance sheets as operational costs soar.

In a free market environment, businesses will always pass increased costs onto the consumer through higher prices and that is what is occurring.

Inflation is starting to burn hot and that fact is confirmed by the most recent inflation data out from Uncle Sam, which shows an annual inflation rate of over 4%. Many analysts claim government inflation figures vastly understate the real inflation rate. If that is true, the real rate might be even higher

What happens next is why the living wage proponents are calling for even higher wages. As wages rise, consumer prices follow. Therefore, with each increase in the wage rate, inflation rises even faster, negating the previous increases. A viscous cycle yet a familiar one to astute economists.

Many argue against the very concept of a living wage, saying it is arbitrary and doesn’t consider geographic realities. An example would be the cost of living in New York compared to living in Modesto.

Others claim a more sinister thing is at work here. Wage inflation will always push consumer costs faster and higher than the so-called “living wage”. Because of this fact, many argue, including this analyst, that the living wage debate is a nonsensical argument.

Since it is an accepted fundamental in the study of economics that wages will always lag consumer price inflation, the argument is put forth that the living wage can never be reached by mandating wages ever higher. In fact, those very same mandates may be the cause of the problem. Inflation will always “outrun” wages and it is why some find themselves repeatedly calling for an even higher living wage, and then wondering why it is never enough.

Opponents to minimum the wage mandates, which include opposing the very concept of a “living wage” (which is an arbitrary opinion depending on whose making the argument), point to the fact that an unmolested capitalistic system would correct wage/inflation conflicts. The argument is extended to address the failure of the current capitalistic system and blaming it as the cause of wage deficiencies. Many believe the current system is one that has been highly manipulated away from capitalism because of massive government monetary intervention, which distorts the checks and balances of a capitalistic system.

The result is what we see now: insufficient wage rates exasperated by rising prices, and a constant call for higher and higher wages.

No matter which side of the argument ones believes, we must acknowledge that a true solution to a problem solves it. Conversely, repeated attempts signify failure.

The minimum wage has been raised 22 times to combat inflation. In the face of these increases, it never seems to be enough, and living wage proponents find themselves constantly calling for ever higher wages. The cycle is akin to a cat chasing its tail, which is an attempt in futility.

In conclusion, income inequality is at least partially caused by inflation, which in turn owes its existence to the very same wage policies that attempt to correct it.

LOCAL FISHING

Salmon season begins July 16th... Sacramento River; Use Kwickfish w/ Sardine Filet Wrap. Fisherman's Comment: Beware! Do not fish 0-250 ft. downriver from the overflow side of Fremont, Sacramento, Moulton, Colusa, or Tisdale Weirs. Fuller Lake; Route #18 off highway 20 near Nevada City. Stocked with rainbows. Launch hand powered watercraft , or fish from the bank. Use: Sheep's Creek #12 fly. (b)

Always put your best foot/lure forward. ~ Brownie

- Can General Mark Milley be as racist as indicated by his claiming before Congress that "white rage" must be eliminated from the public discourse? What is "white rage", you idiot? It sounds like you need some basic therapy.
- Members of the Senate Republican Caucus delivered a letter to the State requesting a 'Gas Tax Holiday' including no gas tax collection for the 2021-2022 Year. This action would provide financial relief while ensuring that transportation infrastructure projects are not impacted. What do you bet they will not act to help the folks?
- Why do we continue to cry out? Because adversity often prepares ordinary people for extraordinary possibilities.
- Well, the Supreme justices got something right. They ruled that you can be master of your house and keep bad folks out. The farmers of California will rejoice that the Farm Workers Union may be kept off their farms during work time. Elementary, my dear Watson.
- Guiliani spoke the truth. Therefore New York yanked his law license he needs to earn his livelihood. But they didn't do anything to Cuomo when he lied. Equal justice?
- Remember the famous words of one of our former First Ladies about drugs? "Just say no." On TV today say yes to every conceivable pill, spray or injection. Quite a turnaround.
- Biden wants us to spy on our neighbors and turn them in for being radical. And what does radical mean? Does this mean if they are telling the truth about election fraud they are radical? Does that mean if they believe that the virus came from a lab in China, they are radical? If they oppose segregating schools they are radical? If they speak out again the burning, looting and rioting in our streets, are they radical? Stephen Franks has the right idea about how to start this witch hunt. "turn in Eric Swalwell for his relationship - with a communist Chinese spy. Turn in Adam Schiff for attempting to overthrow the U.S. government by using phony Russian documents. I will turn in AOL, and her squad for hating Jews and white people". He goes on to say "Who uses private citizens to spy on other citizens? Nazi Germany, the Soviet Union and Russia, China, Cuba. Turn in Jane Fonda, Gavin Newsom and certainly San Fran Nan (Pelosi)."

- New York is allowing a serious attack on our liberties. Jews are being attacked as the police are told to stand down. Let us be clear. Jews are Americans as are the rest of us. To turn your head to their misery is racist and dead wrong.
- California politicians are addle-brained at best, brainless at worse. They want trans-males to compete with girls in girls sports. If they were any more stupid, it would be hard to tell them from apes.
- They can't keep from scaring the day-lights out of us. Now it's space debris. As chicken little says, "the sky is falling."
- If you wonder what Kamala Harris is good at, ask Willie Brown.
- A Hammer-throw medal winner turns her back on the American flag and anthem. She managed to ruin the day for the other two winners. Hopefully her ticket to the Olympics vanishes.
- Here we go again. Why can't we get the message across? Maybe a solid whack across the head would help. The San Jose city council voted to approve a proposal requiring all gun owners in the city to carry liability insurance and pay an annual fee that will go toward supporting emergency and police services. Before this idiocy goes into effect, they must first repeal the 2nd Amendment.
- Katja Guenther, a professor of gender and sexuality studies at the University of California-Riverside, believes killing shelter dogs is proof of white supremacy. Oh, how our money is spent in the colleges. ★

Where Are You Michelle?

By Seti Long

LIVE OAK, CA (MPG) - Family and friends of a missing Live Oak teen came together last week, desperate to generate awareness for their missing loved one, hoping to bring her home.

Michelle Torres, 16, of Live Oak has been missing since May 8th of 2021. Two months later, she is still gone and there has been little traction in her case or media attention until recently. Her parents, Rosalva and Miguel Torres attempt to elaborate on that and explain through translator and Michelle’s aunt, Erica Benitez, why they believe that is.

According to the Torres, Michelle, a straight-A student at Live Oak High School, had run away from home earlier in what seemed to be a rebellious response to disciplinary action taken by her family. She was located later that day at a friend’s home. Michelle is missing - run away again, and this time her family fears that she has fallen in with a bad element and or may be afraid to come back. They reported her missing and the case is being handled by the Sutter County Sheriff’s Department but, allegedly, Michelle has been classified a “runaway.” The family says that they are being told that because she left her home willingly, she is not considered to be in danger. Regardless, her family wants Michelle back home and is rallying to get the word out.

Self-proclaimed activist, Ray Leno, reached out to the family and has been working with them to bring more attention to their cause. Last Wednesday, July 7th, a day shy of the two-month-missing mark, Leno organized a gathering of friends, family and supporters at the Acro Super Power Mart Gas Station in Live Oak and with bullhorn in hand, they marched through town shouting “bring her home” and posted “Missing” flyers. It worked. People stopped and asked what was going on, traffic honked in support, and Michelle’s name began to pop up on more Facebook feeds.

The Torres family confirmed that they believe Michelle was seen in the area June 24th, and hopes that with the community’s help, they can bring their 16-year-old missing daughter home. “I love her a lot. And what I am doing is because I love her and because I want to find her,” says her mother Rosalva holding a sign that asks, “Where are you Michelle?” just before the Wednesday march.

Michelle Torres is a 16-year-old, Hispanic female, weighing 100 lbs. with a height of 5’5”. She went missing with longer hair and may have cut it short. She may also go by the alias birthdate of 12-8-2005. If you have seen Michelle or know where she is, please contact the Sutter County Sheriff’s Office at 530-822-7307.
