Halting Child Support Debt

Legislature looks to halt collections, for some

California lawmakers have advanced a budget proposal to stop collecting child support debt from some parents who are receiving cash assistance. Photo courtesy Keira Burton from Pexels

By Nigel Duara and
Kate Cimini, CALMatters.org

California lawmakers have advanced a budget proposal to stop collecting child support debt from some parents who are receiving cash assistance, but the proposed solutions are a far cry from what advocates for those debt-holders sought in January.

The Legislature's budget proposal would reduce or expunge debt owed to the government – not the debt owed to families – for parents whose only source of income is from Supplemental Security Income or State Supplementary Payment, the Cash Assistance Program for Immigrants, a combination of SSI/SSP and Social Security Disability Insurance benefits, or Veterans Administration disability benefits.

The proposal could cut a break for a narrow subset of the larger population of Californians who owe child support debt to the government; the state did not release to CalMatters the exact number of people receiving those benefits who owe child support debt, and it's unclear if the state has that number.

For context, the Senate Appropriations Committee found that removing all people in arrears from child support debt would cost the state hundreds of millions of dollars and save only $3.7 million in the general fund by letting go of 98 full-time Department of Child Support Services employees who work in child support debt collection.

The proposal still needs to be negotiated with the Newsom administration.

Still, advocates for the poor had asked the state to go farther by forgiving old, uncollectible debt. And the current proposal leaves the state's 10% interest rate on child support debt, one of the highest interest rates of its kind in the country.

The theory behind child support is that a parent who doesn't have custody of a child supports the child with monthly payments. But that's not how it works in practice for parents who also receive cash assistance from the federal welfare-to-work Temporary Assistance to Needy Families program, known as CalWORKS in California.

As CalMatters and The Salinas Californian reported last month, California takes a piece of the child support payments owed to custodial parents, usually mothers, receiving these cash benefits. In some cases, that piece is more than half of the total

SCRCD Receives Grant to Plan Feather River Parkway

SCRCD Press Release

SUTTER COUNTY, CA (MPG) - The Sutter County Resource Conservancy District (SCRCD) has been awarded a grant from the National Parks Service Rivers, Trails and Conservation Assistance program to plan the financing and construction of a parkway along the Feather River at Yuba City.

The National Parks Service will provide information and guidance regarding planning and financing the project. The Parkway would extend south from Willow Island Park along the Feather River to Shanghai Bend. The Parkway would provide pedestrian, hiking, and biking trails along the Feather River. The project would also restore the natural habitat in the area and provide educational displays.

A project was originally scheduled to be completed in 2006 but was postponed due to a lack of funds. Mike Johnston, who is heading the project for the SCRCD, stated that "The Sutter County RCD was ecstatic to learn we had been awarded such a prestigious grant. Five states competed for the 50 projects selected this year. The Parkway project will provide both recreational and economic opportunities for the community and allow for greater access to one of Sutter County's most precious resources."

A riverfront park project is supported by the Sutter County Board of Supervisors, Yuba City Council, Levee District 1, Marysville City Council, Chamber of Commerce, Middle Mountain Interpretive Hikes, and the Sacramento Area Council of Governments.

The National Park Service Rivers, Trails, and Conservation Assistance program extends and expands the benefits of the National Park Service to communities throughout the nation, supporting community-led natural resource conservation and outdoor recreation projects across the nation. Their national network of conservation and recreation planning professionals partners with community groups, non-profits, tribes, and state and local governments to design trails and parks, conserve and improve access to rivers, protect special places, and create recreation opportunities.

Fiesta de Frida Celebrates Artist Frida Kahlo

Yuba Sutter Arts &
Culture Press Release

MARYSVILLE, CA (MPG) - Few artists have achieved the iconic status of Frida Kahlo. It's as if she just stepped out of the latest reality TV show as a trend setter and cultural disrupter. Now, Yuba Sutter Arts & Culture will celebrate the style and persona of visionary painter Frida Kahlo—an artist who continues to inspire with her story of love, adventure, pain, and courage. Fiesta de Frida will include art displays with Frida Kahlo as the subject as well as artworks inspired by her life and art, including themes of Frida's Garden, Mexican culture and fashion, vibrant colors, surrealism, and more.

Fiesta de Frida will be held on Saturday, July 10th from 11am to 4pm in the Yuba Sutter Arts Courtyard and Art Gallery, 624 E Street in Marysville. The event is free and open to the public. There is plenty

This Month In Your Garden

BALD MOUNTAIN NURSERY

6195 BALD MOUNTAIN ROAD • BROWNS VALLEY, CA • 530-743-4856

July tends to be the warmest month of the year along with August. It's a nice time of the year for BBQ's and relaxing in the yard in the evening. Cooking vegetables from your own garden along with whatever else you want to BBQ is satisfying. Growing lots of your own food for the BBQ from your vegetable garden is great. Continue to enjoy the bounty from your vegetable garden by fertilizing monthly using a vegetable fertilizer. It is best to avoid high nitrogen fertilizers because they create too much just green growth at the expense of more fruiting. Keep an eye out for tomato worms – they blend in so well making it hard to see them and they can defoliate a plant quickly. Spray them with Bacillus Thuringiensis (or BT for short) to kill them. It is specific for caterpillars and is organic. Some people hand pick them, others cut them in two with their pruners. I like the BT method but I know some people who have chickens and the chickens love them when they are pulled off the plant and tossed to them. So I've been told.

A common summertime pest is the budworm that seems to prefer geraniums and petunias, making holes in the buds and the stems. They, too, can be controlled by BT. It is a good product to have in your supply of garden pest control items. Lady Bugs and Praying Mantis are two great insects for controlling the bad guys. Many garden supply stores have them to sell earlier in the season, but they may be harder to find now. If you have them in your yard, try to avoid them when spraying insecticides.

July, is a typically warm month, but it is still okay to plant. Many people are enjoying vacation time and want to take advantage of the time to plant a tree where the summer sun has made it obvious that a tree is needed for shade to make an area of the yard more useable. Of course, it will be necessary that anything planted when it is hot will need to be watered more frequently and adequately than normal to help establish new roots. Using a product called 'Superthrive' at the time of planting and then once a week or so will help make the transition from container to the ground easier. If you really need to transplant a well established plant, some root is usually lost and 'Superthrive' will certainly help that, too. For planting this time of year, it is best to do it in the evening as the temperatures are cooling off. The biggest thing to remember is to make sure to pay close attention to the watering. The ground should be moist at planting, then use deep watering practices. Water daily for the first week and then deep soak two or three times a week. Make sure you mulch well too. That saves water and keeps the roots cool during the summer.

Keeping your plants well watered, in order that they survive the heat, is the most important gardening chore needed now. Watering plants in your landscape with drip irrigation is a very good way to do it. Drip systems are water savers since they are targeted at the plant and not all of the space around. That also helps to keep the weeds down since the whole area isn't always being kept wet. Most weeds can use just as much water as the plants, so keeping them cleared away will save water. Mulching around the base of plants will help prevent evaporation reducing the need of frequent watering, also helping to keep them weed free. We find that trees on drip systems are sometimes short on water just because the owner doesn't think to give more time on the watering cycle. We all drink more liquids during the hot weather – so do plants, and especially trees. We have customers bring a small tree branch with droopy leaves that are dry around the edges fearing that the tree has a disease. Those are actually the first signs of not enough water. It is best to give trees a good deep watering less frequently than to water them daily with a lesser amount of water. As a general rule it is better to water new plantings or plants in containers in the morning so they have moisture to draw on all day. That is not an option for many of us who leave for work early in the morning. In that case, later in the evening may have to do and usually works out well since they don't transpire much moisture in the cooler night environment. If you have an automated system so much the better – check it routinely to be sure it is working properly. Enjoy your July 4th holiday. We will be closed on the 4th.

In addition to being a teaching artist at Little Stars Academy and Playzeum, she is a frequent exhibitor at the "Second Saturday" events and other art festivals in Sacramento.

"I have always been inspired by Frida's life story and her amazing artwork," said show curator Lila Rivera. "Her life story and struggles informed her work so deeply and I love to be able to share more about Frida with our community through this event," she added.

Frida Kahlo, born Magdalena Carmen Frida Kahlo y Calderón, (July 6, 1907 – July 13, 1954) was a Mexican artist who painted many portraits, self-portraits, and works inspired by the nature and artifacts of Mexico. Inspired by the country's popular culture, she employed a naïve folk art style to explore questions of identity, post colonialism, gender, class, and race in Mexican society. Her paintings often had strong autobiographical elements and mixed realism with fantasy. Kahlo has been described as a surrealist or magical realist.

payment. Meanwhile, if the noncustodial parent falls behind on child support payments, that debt piles up through an interest rate of 10%.

The state itself, in a report commissioned by the child support services agency, has had academics saying since at least 2003 that much of that debt is uncollectible. If states don't recover the money from parents, the state itself owes the federal government the debt. Some states have begun to pass through 100% of child support payments to families, and Colorado passed a law dictating that the state repay the federal government.

Most states are like California, which passes through $100 for families on public assistance with one child and $200 for families with two or more children. Last year, Gov. Gavin Newsom vetoed an Assembly measure that would have eliminated

California's 10% interest charges, saying the state needs the money.

Last week, the governor's office told CalMatters that "given the revenue impact" of ending collections on child support debt, Newsom "sought to have this issue addressed through the budget process" when he vetoed the Assembly measure.

It seems that day has arrived.

Federal data shows California is keeping an unusually high portion of the child support payments — more than 3½ times the national average. That has a knock-on effect for the parents responsible for that debt: They have a harder time getting and keeping jobs, their drivers' licenses are subject to revocation and the children and noncustodial parents receive less.

How to End California's Homelessness Crisis

California, which in the past three years spent more than $13 billion, roughly $30,000 annually for each homeless person, to address it. Tragically, its "housing first" approach is a colossal failure. MPG file photo

Commentary by Kerry Jackson and Wayne Winegarden

Homelessness is a growing problem in virtually every state. Nowhere is it more pressing than in California, which in the past three years spent more than $13 billion, roughly $30,000 annually for each homeless person, to address it. Tragically, its "housing first" approach is a colossal failure. Overall, says the state auditor's office, California's homelessness programs are disjointed and poorly managed.

Despite little progress, policymakers keep throwing more money at the problem. Rather than adopting California's current government-centric approach, other states should learn from its mistakes by embracing reforms that directly tackle the core issues.

Many homeless suffer from mental illness and substance abuse struggles that require creating a pathway to recovery. Unfortunately, the legal precedent of Martin v. City of Boise is creating a "right to live on the streets." Policy changes such as California's voter-approved Proposition 47 have effectively discouraged the enforcement of shoplifting items up to $950, creating a means for the addicted or mentally ill homeless to support their habits.

Instead of enabling homelessness, states should ensure appropriate punishment for those who violate the law. However, interactions with law enforcement should be viewed as opportunities to connect homeless individuals with the help and resources they need.

One innovative approach is homeless courts that "sentence" offenders to treatment, then expunging their records once successfully completed, as proposed in the California's Compassionate Intervention Act. At the same time, the developing "right to sleep on the street" needs to be challenged through legal channels.

To complement these efforts, states should partner with private nonprofits that have successfully helped many transition off the streets. Even President Barack Obama has acknowledged that "the private and philanthropic sectors are responsible for some of the best thinking, innovation, and evidence-based approaches to ending homelessness."

Shelters to Shutters represents exactly what he was talking about. The Vienna, Virginia, nonprofit emphasizes job placement and housing based on the mantra that "the solution truly needs to be about both." Another strategy initiates contact with the homeless by providing necessities, including bag storage, transportation, Internet access, and a sitting room. While offering these services, the Crossroads Welcome Center in Tennessee determines each client's needs and tries to direct them to institutions for further care.

Given the severity of today's crisis, the homeless need to be relocated with an urgency. San Diego's use of large tents that serve as transitional housing for about 700 a night and cost roughly $11.3 million shows how this can be done.

California's infamous unaffordability problems are also a causal driver of homelessness. Policymakers nationwide should implement regulatory reforms that lessen excessive living costs to alleviate the economic pressures driving too many people into the streets.

The California Environmental Quality Act, the biggest barrier to homebuilding, increases costs, and causes extended construction delays. It, as well as similar laws elsewhere, is overdue for reform.

States should pursue zoning regulatory reform to simplify multi-layered restrictions, speed up the building-permit process, and ease restrictions on building duplexes, triplexes, and granny flats in order to expand the stock of affordable housing. Eliminating rent control would also meaningfully expand the supply of housing and reduce costs, particularly in cities where housing is the most expensive.

Sustainably addressing the homelessness crisis in California and every state is a moral imperative and an economic necessity. Current conditions are the unintended consequence of policies implemented by state and local governments. Though the situation is dire in California, the good news is states can make a meaningful difference if they reject the Golden State's ill-advised policies. Adopting the right policies should be at the top of every state's legislative to-do list.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

We can get better, more accurate, news from cartoon strips than major news outlets. News should be fact based not fabrications, exaggerations, omissions, or opinions. Fake, pseudo, counterfeit and fabricated news are cousins of propaganda and "yellow journalism". Journalists, consider a career in fiction. Your opinions belong in the "Letters to the Editor". We are supposed to believe your anonymous, highly placed "trusted sources". Are you kidding? We, the public, depend on, and expect your reports to be accurate, so we can make informed daily decisions. Most, so-called, journalists and reporters have never spent a day in a school of journalism. If they attended a school of journalism, they skipped the class on ethics in journalism. A good lie or joke always contains enough truth to make it sound believable. Why don't you become comedians, clowns, or circus side-show "barkers"? I took one class in journalism from an instructor, a journalist, who said before any of his stories were published, he had to have three verifiable sources. This no longer applies. He covered slander and libel. He said the best defense against a charge of slander or libel is the TRUTH. Want to get TRUTH back into journalism, start suing these charlatans who fabricate, and spread pseudo news stories libeling anyone with whom they disagree. Perhaps when these "heel-clicking" left wing journalists, reporters, editors, and owners of news outlets start paying millions of dollars in lawsuits, they will begin reporting fact based, unbiased news. California's Pro-Housing Forces Score Big Win

By Dan Walters
CALMatters

California's housing crisis is a multi-front guerrilla war, pitting those who want to lower legal and political barriers to construction against those who see new developments as threats to the environment and/or the ambience of their neighborhoods.

The conflict is waged in the Legislature, in the state housing bureaucracy, in city councils, in the courts and, increasingly, at the ballot box. Every new offensive assault by pro-housing forces meets stout resistance by defenders of the status quo and over time, it's been something of a stalemate.

Housing construction remains well below the levels needed to close the gap between supply and demand, resulting in ever-rising rents and home prices, ever-increasing angst for Californians priced out of the market and an adverse effect on the economy as workers migrate to more affordable communities elsewhere.

Get a veteran journalist's take on what's going on in California with a weekly round-up of Dan's column every Friday.

The Housing Crisis Act of 2019 was a major thrust by the pro-housing faction. Senate Bill 330 was aimed at blocking local government policies, such as restrictive zoning, caps on building permits or unworkable design standards that limit new housing developments.

Not surprisingly, the legislation was opposed by local government officials as undermining their historic power to shape the tenor of their communities through controls on land use. However, it was passed by strong majorities in both legislative houses and signed by Gov. Gavin Newsom, who had promised to meet the housing crisis head-on.

While the legislation limited the authority of local government officials, it may turn out to be a groundbreaking limit on the power of local voters as well.

The legislation's passage more or less coincided with the Oceanside City Council's approval of a 585-home subdivision called North River Farms, which bills itself as a country village integrated with small-scale agriculture. The council rezoned land to make the project feasible.

Despite its bucolic nature, North River Farms was opposed by existing residents of the area and some environmental groups. They launched a recall campaign against one of the council members who voted for the project and eventually placed a measure on the 2020 ballot to overturn the council's decision, which was passed by a 2-1 margin of the city's voters.

Thereupon, the project's developer, sued to overturn the referendum, alleging that it violated the Housing Crisis Act of 2019 and last month, Superior Court Judge Richard Whitney declared that the new law did apply to the referendum.

In overturning the election results, Whitney said SB 330's clear aim was to "maximize the development of housing" by overriding any local action or policy that attempts to limit construction.

Whitney's ruling will no doubt face appeals to higher courts and could collide with a 2017 state Supreme Court decree, in a case involving taxation, that ballot measures are not subject to the same limits applied to local governments.

Writing the 5-2 majority opinion, Supreme Court Justice Mariano-Florentino Cuéllar declared, "Multiple provisions of the state constitution explicitly constrain the power of local governments to raise taxes. But we will not lightly apply such restrictions on local governments to voter initiatives."

There is also a larger issue posed by the Oceanside case — whether zoning changes are legislative acts subject to referendum or merely administrative actions that are exempt from such challenges. Oregon, for instance, has flatly prohibited the use of referenda to oppose zoning changes.

The Oceanside case is not an isolated example of employing referenda to block projects. If Whitney is upheld, it will be a major victory for pro-housing forces by eliminating one arrow in the quiver of those who resist new development.

Vaccines and Validity

The economic effect from CoVid-19 has been devastating. In my opinion, the response from the government has been equally distortional. I have always been against the shutdowns. Never should have happened. The virus has paid no attention to them and countries that had severe restrictions fared no better in the long run than those who did not shut down.

Opinions and studies vary on this yet here we have Japan who are the mask kings, and they've had two vicious resurgence in cases, albeit the world does seem to be quieting down at least a bit. With everything opening up however, it will be interesting to see if another spike is in the cards or if the winter flu season causes more CoVid cases.

With the vaccine comes some sort of peace of mind I suppose, but once again Americans find themselves at polar opposites on that as well.

A good portion of the country says they won't get a shot. Others debate which shot to get. Still another debate rages around a "Vax passport", which are possible travel or attendance restrictions based on whether one can show a vaccination card or not.

Your papers please. The vaccination card I have seen. An acquaintance has one, as does a family member. Looks like something cooked up on a word document, with hand scribbled notes, numbers and a name. Deemed so important, the card itself looked like a typical Government rush job.

Honestly, my graphic artist and two hours on a good computer could put out something better. There is no mag strip or anything resembling official on it except a CDC logo. One could copy the thing and replace the information and produce 100 of them inside of an hour.

Considering California is making everyone get a new and improved state ID/drivers license which replaces the almost previous bullet proof one, the new one is even more tamper proof and impossible to duplicate.

Not so the vaccination card. Many institutions and workplaces are offering perks and even requirements for showing a card. Some companies are having you upload a copy as our some other entities. The newsroom made a bet we could upload a fake one to almost any entity and it would be accepted.

We discussed just that and possibly uploading one to a government site and one to a private company with bogus information to see if they pass muster. We would notify the entity it was bogus once we get it back if we indeed attempt it. The web says it's a felony duplicating a government ID but there is some money and a morbid curiosity riding on the outcome so we are thinking about it.

I'll let you know what the outcome is if we decide to proceed.

Supposedly, a "lot" number along with corresponding recipient ID is logged somewhere. Lot numbers are available on the web although I can't see how all these hand scribbled cards from thousands of little pharmacies and vaccination locations could possibly be centrally recorded somewhere.

Seeing as there is a lottery in states around the country for getting a vaccine and the California system automatically enters you if you have had a shot, I would say there must be some sort of database somewhere. How accurate it is remains to be seen. You know how the government can be.

Speaking of incentives, some are asking if the vaccine is so great, how come we have to pay people to take it?

Sounds like a script out of some futuristic big brother movie. Are they injecting Martian DNA into us? How about tiny tracking nanobots?

And finally, economics aside, the vaccine does test the very definition of freedom and liberty. Liberty is brilliantly defined as "One has the right to do as they please, as long as it doesn't infringe upon the rights of another".

"Vaxers" say your refusal to vaccinate violates their right to be healthy and disease free, while "anti-vaxers" state it is their right not to be forced to inject something into their bodies. I would add something as new and untested as a CoVid vaccine. Remember, on average most vaccines take years to be approved. Not so with these vaccines. You must also sign an acknowledgment of taking an unapproved vaccine and waiver of liability before you get any of the CoVid vaccines.

Humm.... In conclusion, because I have some high-risk family members and out of respect for my many clients, both my wife and I have been vaccinated.

Water District Intends to Sell Water to Southern California

On Friday, the North Yuba Water District hired a Fresno consulting firm, Provost & Pritchard, to develop a water marketing plan to sell up to 80% of the District's water to water purveyors outside of its service boundary, which could be worth up to $17 Million.

Who stands to benefit from this sale of water? Certainly not the District's customers. Perhaps Supervisor and Yuba Water Agency Director Randy Fletcher knows, as he wholeheartedly supports the District and his director friends Gary Hawthorne, Doug Neilson, and Fred Mitchell.

It is incredulous to believe that these people, these elected officials, are thieves trying to steal water for their personal benefit in front of everybody, but that is exactly what the evidence shows.

High Fives Foundation is Nonprofit of the Year for Assembly District-01

By Erica Brahms,
Office of Assemblywoman
Megan Dahle

SACRAMENTO, CA (MPG) - Assemblywoman Megan Dahle honors Truckee-based High Fives Foundation as the 2021 California Nonprofit of the Year for the First Assembly District.

She nominated this organization because of their inspiring mission to provide access to sports for people who may not have the opportunity to participate otherwise. This organization helps injured athletes and Veterans return to sports and outdoor activities. The High Fives Foundation aims to be the leader of education and recovery of life-altering injuries in outdoor sports.

To learn more about High Fives Foundation's and their mission visit highfivesfoundation.org/.

This is the fifth year of the California Nonprofit of the Year initiative, and with nonprofits doing more than ever to help their communities throughout the COVID-19 crisis, their work should rightfully be celebrated.

"Nonprofits are often hidden in plain sight," said Jan Masaoka, CEO of the California Association of Nonprofits

(CalNonprofits). "With one in every 14 California jobs being at a nonprofit, honoring a California Nonprofit of the Year shows that elected officials recognize and celebrate the good work they see nonprofits doing in their districts. We urge everyone to appreciate the collective impact of nonprofits in our communities."

Assemblywoman Megan Dahle represents the 1st Assembly District in the California Legislature, which includes portions of Butte and Placer counties, along with Lassen, Modoc, Nevada, Plumas, Shasta, Sierra, and Siskiyou counties. ★

Democrats Reject Funding for Wildfire Prevention

By Joe Zanze, Office of Assemblyman James Gallagher

SACRAMENTO, CA (MPG) - Democrats in the California State Assembly voted down a proposal that would have funded critical wildfire prevention.

Assemblyman James Gallagher (R-Yuba City) introduced the emergency budget amendment in the wake of a bombshell report exposing Gavin Newsom's outright lies on wildfire prevention in California.

Gallagher, who represents the Town of Paradise and the area devastated by the deadly Camp Fire in 2018, commented on the situation.

"Every member of the California State Assembly is aware that Newsom was touting bogus accomplishments on wildfire prevention. Yet, the Democratic Super-Majority still rejected a modest funding request in advance of what could be another horrific fire season. It's astonishing that even with a $76 billion budget surplus, preventing the devastation of wildfires still isn't a priority in Sacramento," said Gallagher.

Gallagher's emergency budget amendment would have continuously appropriated $200 million from the Greenhouse Gas Reduction Fund for healthy forest and fire prevention projects.

The proposal was similar to Assembly Bill 297 (Gallagher) which Assembly Democrats prevented from even getting a committee hearing earlier this year.

A video can be found on Facebook under Gallagher Fights for Wildfire Funding.

Assemblyman James Gallagher represents the 3rd Assembly District, which encompasses all of Glenn, Sutter, Tehama and Yuba counties as well as portions. ★

Paradise Resident Arrested for Possession of Child Pornography

BCSO Press Release

PARADISE, CA (MPG) - In 2020, Butte County Sheriff's Office (BCSO) detectives began investigating Terry Rogers, age 68, of Paradise. During the investigation, detectives located evidence indicating Rogers was downloading child pornography. On June 11, 2021, detectives conducted a traffic enforcement stop on a vehicle driven by Rogers, and subsequently served a search warrant at Rogers' residence, which is located in the 5000 block of Royal Point Drive, Paradise.

During the service of the search warrant, detectives seized multiple electronic devices that belonged to Rogers. Detectives later conducted forensic searches of the electronic devices and located multiple images of child pornography. Detectives also located evidence indicating Rogers was the individual who downloaded the child pornography.

On June 14, detectives placed Rogers under arrest for a felony count of possessing over 600 images of child pornography, and for a felony count of possession of child pornography portraying sexual masochism. Rogers was booked into the Butte County Jail. Rogers later posted bail and is scheduled to be arraigned at the Butte County Superior Court on September 3, 2021, at 8:30 a.m. The Sheriff's Office is asking anyone with additional information about this investigation to contact Detective Mary Barker at 530-538-7671. ★

Water-Rights Curtailments Affect Farmers

Created to deal with scarcity, the California water-rights system is being tested this summer. A state water board has already imposed emergency regulations in the Russian River watershed and warned water-right holders in much of the Central Valley about water cutbacks. A Sacramento Valley farmer affected by the action says his farm will idle about one-third of its rice acreage because of short water supplies.

Port Congestion Slows Flow of Farm Exports

Continued shipping backlogs at California ports prove a headache for farm exporters. Ports have struggled to keep up with shipment volumes as Americans ordered more goods from Asia during the pandemic. As a result, outgoing shipments of perishable fruits and vegetables have been delayed—causing some to spoil before they reach their destination. In some cases, exporters can ship produce by air, but that's not always available or affordable.

Urban Farms Also Struggle During Drought

Farmers growing food on small plots of urban ground will suffer from the extreme drought, according to University of California farm advisors. UC Cooperative Extension says water rationing and surcharges imposed in past droughts proved a significant problem for certain urban farms and community gardens. Its report recommended that cities and counties provide "affordable, consistent water prices" for urban agriculture.

Study Shows How Almond Nectar Benefits Bees

Not only do honeybees pollinate almond trees, but a component of almond nectar and pollen proves beneficial to bee health. U.S. Department of Agriculture scientists say the compound (amygdalin) can reduce viruses and parasites that threaten honeybee health. Bees consume the natural compound during almond pollination season. A separate USDA study tracks importation of hundreds of thousands of bee colonies into California for pollination. ★

Opportunity Among Chaos: Pandemic Startups

Commentary
by Marcus N. DiBuduo

In tough times like these, courageous entrepreneurs strike boldly ahead with innovative ideas, often finding success when the future looks bleakest. It doesn't take a historian to know that notable companies forged their legacies when times were toughest: General Electric, Disney, and IBM, to name a few.

Rather than spending extra time on "honey do" lists that now surround you 24/7, spend the time and money working on your passion project: that novel business idea you've had, that product line you've been tinkering with, or teaming up with coworkers to start a new business in a known field.

Before cashing out your savings in hopes of achieving economic and emotional wealth, two steps are needed: identify your idea and develop a plan.

Step 1: Identify your winning idea

If you are going to be successful, you can't just focus on an idea that has the best return on investment (ROI).

The founders of all successful businesses have at least one thing in common: they had a personal interest in their business. If you are curious about running a restaurant, then talk to other restaurateurs. If you have an interesting idea for a mobile phone application, learn what it takes to develop an application from start to finish. If you have always been intrigued by electronic gadgets, take some online hardware or software development classes.

You can't successfully launch a business in an industry you know nothing about. During this "Great Reset," take time to find what you truly enjoy outside of the confines of the default hamster wheel.

Step 2: The Two (or Seven) P's

Many believe that the term "entrepreneur" is synonymous with "inventor." The difference however is significant: entrepreneurs are inventors who have heeded the adage of the "7 Ps" (two of the "Ps" are planning and preparation). Many people get so tied up in the technical aspects of developing their product or service that they forget the end goal – to make money.

From a legal standpoint, the crucial part of planning and preparation are protecting yourself and your ideas. The feudal protective strategies of the past – constructing a hefty castle and moat – have been replaced by modern day acts of forming legal entities, preparing written agreements, and acquiring patents or trademark registrations.

Your first step should be building the castle that protects you and all of your treasures. The castle is the entity you decide to form. This entity, if properly formed, selected, and operated, should protect you from liabilities that may arise in your course of business.

While it may be appealing to use one of the great multitude of low cost online providers of "legal solutions," business attorneys can give countless stories of instances where such providers have sold houses made of straw instead of brick. You should engage legal advisors that can understand the complexities of your personal situation and the liabilities of your business.

Just like inviting visitors in your house during the pandemic, you need to be attentive to those that you invite into your castle. If you plan on having business partners, the rules and expectations need to be clear at the outset. Is the ownership going to be equal? Is the effort going to be equal? Is the compensation going to be fair? Many would-be successful businesses fail because of unclear expectations.

While it may be uncomfortable to have these discussions with your partners, and it may feel as if signing written agreements with your business partners brings an air of untrustworthiness, it is crucial to have defined roles, responsibilities, and financial expectations up front. Frankly, greed, jealousy, and selfishness generally only appear after businesses become successful – and having proper agreements upfront are the best prophylactics to ensuring a stable and successful business.

If your product, service, or brand is unique – at the very beginning stages - you must take steps to protect them. Patents are limited monopolies to make, use, and sell a certain product or service and are designed to restrict competition. Trademarks ensure that customers know from whom they are purchasing a product or service, and help prevent your competitors from taking sales from you. The laws to protect patents and trademarks are complex, and failure to take initial steps to protect them may foreclose protection later. Never disclose your idea to third parties without taking initial steps to protect them. Your hard work will be for naught if you don't take steps to prevent others from taking your ideas and competing with you.

Use the gift of time to contemplate taking a leap of faith and inventing and planning your future. ★
