

Free Seed Exchange now open at Gateway Park Little Free Library

BY STACY GROW

In October 2017, the Gateway Park Little Free Library opened to the public, facilitating a book exchange between neighbors. Multiple neighbors had contributed to the project by building the structure, donating materials, and sharing books they thought others would enjoy. The City Department of Parks and Recreation installed the library for us after collaborating on placement.

The Gateway Park Little Free Library project has been a true community collaboration from the start. I have been proud to serve as the library's steward for the past two-and-a-half years, curating the books and maintaining the structure. I am thrilled to share that last week, a new feature was installed on the east side of the Little Free Library: a weatherproof "literature holder" that will serve as a free seed exchange.

With the seed exchange, gardening can become a source of community connection. Local gardeners are invited to share extra purchased seeds, or to harvest seeds from what they grow to pass on to neighbors. The posted rules for the seed bank are simple:

1. Please take only seeds you can grow in the next year.
2. Please label seeds with the date of harvest. Most seeds can be stored 2-3 years on average.
3. Share your extra seeds (and what you grow) with your friends and neighbors!

While sheltering in place, many people are engaging in home-based hobbies, especially gardening. But due to the high demand, it has been challenging for everyone who wants to grow a garden to access the materials to do so. Seed companies including Burpee, Park Seeds, and Johnny's Selected Seeds have all reported an exponential increase in customer demand for their products in the past two months, leading to slower shipping times and even closing online orders. Locally, many would-be gardeners wait in long lines at nurseries to purchase seeds and starts. Hopefully the seed exchange will provide more opportunities and easier access to seeds.

Yolo Habitat Conservancy Wins Award of Excellence

The Yolo Habitat Conservancy recently received the 2020 American Planning Association's (APA) Sacramento Valley Section Award of Excellence in the category of Innovation in Green Planning and has been invited to apply for the 2020 APA California Awards.

In 2019, the Yolo Habitat Conservancy completed the Yolo Habitat Conservation Plan (HCP)/Natural Community Conservation Plan (NCCP), a countywide conservation approach that provided mitigation for infrastructure and development of activities identified for construction over the next 50 years in Yolo County, including Endangered Species Act permits. The Yolo HCP/NCCP coordinates improvements to maximize benefits to sensitive species as well as conserves habitat above and beyond required mitigation. In addition, the plan will result in the conservation of tens of thousands of acres of habitat benefitting 12 species while providing developers a simplified approach of mitigation through the Yolo Habitat Conservancy.

"The Yolo Habitat Conservancy is but the latest example of the member agencies being at the forefront of best practices in environmental stewardship," said City of West Sacramento Councilmember and Vice Chair of the Yolo Habitat Conservancy Martha Guerrero. "The Yolo Habitat Conservancy will be an integral part of preserving our cherished natural landscapes into the future."

The Yolo HCP/NCCP also will build on existing conservation efforts, such as the work of the City of Davis Open Space Program to preserve agricultural land, Yolo County's work to restore Cache Creek through implementation of the Cache Creek Resources Management Plan, and the work of the Solano County Water Agency and the Lower Putah Creek Co-

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

No Verizon cell service since early May led this reporter down the rabbit hole of endless inquiries

BY MICHELE TOWNSEND

A longtime West Sacramento resident and News-Ledger reader sent in a letter to the editor, explaining since the beginning of May, there has been no Verizon cell service in her neighborhood. The reader said that the morning of Monday, May 4, was the last time that there was service (from Verizon) in the vicinity surrounding Jefferson/West Capitol. She said she personally knows of at least a dozen people with the same problem and that none of them have been able to get the issue resolved with Verizon. She, therefore, turned to the News-Ledger to see if we could get any farther than she and her neighbors have gotten. It seems that there has been a handful of "go-to" reasons/excuses that

THIS 'n' THAT Virtual vs. Hardwired

BY CAROL BOGART

I had to laugh the other day when a friend shared a link titled 'High tech kids' (51f141a0-7c47-4ecf-a5be-e2b33f1460b4, MP4). Short version: A mom and dad place a rotary dial phone in front of their two sons, then video record the boys' multiple failed attempts to figure it out to make a call. Hilarious, until I remembered that my tech savvy son had to show me three times how to answer my new Smart phone. "You swipe it with your thumb," he said. Baffled, I said, "Where's the button?" He rolled his eyes and showed me what 'swipe it' meant. Finally, he sat beside me, called me, pointed to what I was supposed to swipe and pointed to my thumb. Okay, I thought, I can do that. But I still prefer a button. Here's a fact. The older we get, the more resistant we are to change. My folks had a rotary dial phone their entire lives, long after cordless phones were invented. No dishwasher, either. Mom was pushing 80 when she finally got a microwave – and only because dad's business partner gave it to her. Our first TV was black and white. I think my parents bought it, in part, to keep me occupied while mom

1. George Michael and Andrew Ridgeley. Their first release, "Wham Rap!", didn't get much airplay because of the profanity in the b-side "Unsocial Mix." It only reached No. 105 on the charts.
2. Dave Edmunds, in 1978. The song was on his "Tracks on Wax 4" album, with all the members of his band Rockpile, although it was considered Edmund's solo project.
3. Gilbert O'Sullivan, in October 1970. For some stunning vocals, look for the cover version by Burton Cummings, formerly of The Guess Who.
4. "I Will Survive," in 1978. She also wishes she'd asked for the key back.
5. "Gotta Travel On," first released by Billy Grammer in 1958. Over the years the song has been covered by numerous others, including The Weavers, Timi Yuro and Bob Dylan.

Verizon has provided and when those answers haven't worked, the topic got dropped. The News-Ledger was happy to see if we were able to get any farther in getting help or answers.

When the reader and her neighbors have called customer service, they have been told the following: Verizon employees can't see obvious outages. We found out: This is true. Customer Service calls go to an in-bound only call center. The employees there are very restricted in what information they have access to. (They didn't even have access to corporate's number). In addition, customer service has only a few reasons that they are provided with, and these small list of reasons will commonly solve the callers problems. They are as follows: 1. "The system is overloaded from people working from home"

(but service is out 24/7, not just typical work hours, so this doesn't make sense). 2. "That's because we no longer offer 3G" (even though the people calling use 4G so this can't be it). 3. "You need to re-set your phone. Then it will work" (it doesn't). 4. "It must be your phone. You need to buy a newer model" (even though some phones are brand new).

We found out: If your problem does not fall under, or is not fixable under these circumstances, the call center employees don't usually have the capability to go any further. In fact, they only have access to a couple of numbers that they can refer you to... and that must be retrieved from a supervisor.

After two days, 14 separate calls, and countless transfers (from the automated system, not from an employee) I spoke with Customer Service, Customer Care (apparently they are different), in-bound call center, the communications department, complaints Department, repair department, and national accessibility. I explained the problem to each of them and asked them the same questions. Out of all of the people that I talked to, only two of them attempted to help me (even if it was just finding me another number/department to call). One of the call center employees put me on hold to check with his supervisor. When he came back on, he told me that he was only allowed to say the following to me... and had a script that he read from saying that "Verizon Wireless is concerned with all of their customer's concerns and that they do everything they can to make them happy." I was sure to point out that they apparently weren't willing to put in a repair request, an investigation request, or transfer me to someone that could. And yes, I was polite. They again did not have a number I could call.

I finally spoke to a gentleman that after reading the media blip to me for the fourth or fifth time gave me the email address of Public Relations Manager, Heidi Flato. I immediately sent her an email with a copy of the reader's letter and a note explaining very briefly how difficult it has been to even get an email to her. I asked her to please contact me as soon as possible. She did not call, but she emailed me back this message: "Thanks for bringing this to my attention. I am not aware of an outage in the area, but I'm happy to have someone investigate and respond to the customer". Unfortunately, in order to get this into publication in time, that is as far as we have gotten. The News-Ledger welcomes any comments to let us know if it has been addressed in the near future.

Knights Landing Boat Launch Construction Starts June 1

Construction of the long-awaited improvements of the Knights Landing Boat Launch will begin on June 1 and run through Oct. 30, the Yolo County Parks Division announced. In 2017, the county was awarded a $1.45 million grant from the California Wildlife Conservation Board to upgrade the existing facilities. The proposed improvements will enhance visitor experience and reduce ramp queue times with major improvements including: widening the existing concrete ramp; replacing the floating dock with a gangway and boarding float to allow access on both sides; constructing a permanent restroom; installing a new water well and hook-ups for a park host; chip sealing and restriping the parking lot; adding new ADA parking stalls and walkways; and placing riprap along the bank of Sycamore Slough to minimize erosion. The Knights Landing Boat Launch will remain open during the first phase of construction from June 1 through July 26. The facility will be closed to the public starting July 27 through October 30 to allow for in-water construction on the boat ramp and slough bank. It is anticipated the facility will reopen to the public on October 31, 2020. "Versions of this project have been in the works for almost fifteen years, and we are excited to finally start construction," said General Services Director Kevin Yarris. "We understand the facility closure during construction is an inconvenience to many of our customers, but we trust the needed improvements will provide many years of public enjoyment." Additional information about the project and construction schedule can be found on the Yolo County Parks website at: www.yoloparks.org. Questions about the project can be directed to (530) 406-4880 or yolocountyparks@yolocounty.org. Connect with the Yolo County Parks Division on Facebook at: www.facebook.com/yolocountyparks.

Fighting COVID by Spreading Kindness

BY DEVIN LAVELLE

Archbishop Desmond Tutu reminds us, “Our greatest joy is when we seek to do good for others.” It’s an idea that I really connect with and something that many of our friends and neighbors around the community have taken to.

Everyday around the neighborhood and around social media, we see and hear about awesome things people are doing to help their neighbors in these trying times. Sharing food and toiletries directly or through blessing tables. Drawing messages in chalk around the neighborhood. Attending drive-by birthdays to bring joy to kids they’ve never met. Countless custom sewn masks gifted around the neighborhood.

It is really incredibly what our neighborhood can do together. It inspires me. It uplifts me. I hope it uplifts you as well. If so, keep on reading and I’ll tell you about a few neighbors who have been doing some really great things for their neighbors.

Family Bike Tune-ups

Matt Makofsky, his daughter Blossom and partner Larissa recently spent their morning providing free bike tune-ups at Seymour Park to neighbors. He “got the idea while out riding his bike. He thought it would be nice to help others get out on their bikes and ride on our neighborhood’s great trails.”

Matt, who worked as a bike tech for years in the Bay Area, did the tune-ups with assistance from Blossom (9). She also “helped by making signs and chalk directions in the park the day of the tune-ups.” Larissa “kept everyone organized, posted on Nextdoor, scrounged up cleaning supplies and hand sanitizer and helped put air in the tires during the day.” Together they worked on about 2-dozen bikes, address “issues ranged from a safety check to putting a bike entirely back together.”

Larissa tells us, “It was inspiring to see people patiently waiting with bikes they wanted to get back on the trails. Afterward we received messages of gratitude for kids able to ride their bikes again and adults that were excited to get out and rode over 10 miles after getting a tune-up. There were many that didn’t see the post on Nextdoor until we were done for the day and wanted to take part. We will be doing it again, so keep an eye out on Nextdoor for our post!”

She adds, “We have been working with Blossom on riding her bike for the past year or so. At times it has been a challenge to get her as excited as us to get out on our bikes. After seeing everyone out with their bikes, and seeing her dad help everyone that came by, she exclaimed that biking was her new favorite hobby!”

Free Landscaping for Unsung Heroes

Art Ballard, owner of Creekside Landscaping, is providing his services free of charge to employees of our local Bel Air. He told me, “I just had been hearing everyone appreciating the medical care professionals and of course I appreciate them putting themselves at risk, but there was another group of workers we all see frequently. They’re putting themselves at risk and they seem worried and frazzled and it was something that was simple and easy for me to do to show appreciation for the people who are allowing us to get food and get necessities.”

The number of people he’s helping is growing. “So far 8 families have taken me up on it. They seem very, very grateful to have the help. They don’t seem to get the recognition they deserve. I think it’s pretty likely that I’ll be able to expand to offer it to another store soon.”

He adds, “I feel grateful that I’m able to continue working, so I wanted to be able to spread that and do my part for the community.”

Fighting the TP Shortage

Tami Conger put her family to work getting toiletries and safety products to neighbors in need.

It was all the more impressive because she “was a little late to the party. As Covid was picking up steam, we were mentally pre-occupied because a friend in Florida had had a stroke and wasn’t doing well. I was focusing on preparing for the trip and trying to make sure my work was covered. Just before we left, our grandson’s car broke down so I was trying to get him a new car before we left on top of everything else. Obviously, I wasn’t watching the news much.”

Upon returning to work things quickly shifted, “When I came home after my first day back at work, I told my husband that the college was talking about shutting down. That’s when he told me that people were going crazy for TP. I actually laughed because I thought he was kidding.”

We all know he was not, so she quickly jumped into action, “I called my brother-in-law in Simi Valley. He owns a custodial business in So-Cal. I asked him if he could spare a case or two of TP & Paper Towels and he said ‘absolutely’.

My sister and I met half way and she gave me the cases.” She added to that, “a supply of gloves and masks because my uncle had lived with us until he passed” and Lysol wipes from her Costco-enthused husband.

In total, she delivered 140 rolls of toilet paper, 40 rolls of paper towels, 6 boxes of gloves, 6 containers of Lysol wipes and 65 masks to 40 neighbors in our community.

“It felt great to have the ability to help my neighbors. I met a lot of new people and they were all so kind. I’m a bit of a workaholic and only really know the neighbors within a house or two. This gave me the opportunity to get to know more people within our community. I’m a strong believer in karma, both good and bad, and if I can help someone, I will. I’m fortunate that everything fell into place,” Tami reflected. She fondly remembers how “Maritza met me at the door, all smiles. She thanked me over and over,” adding, “thinking about Maritza still brings a smile to my face

In addition to her family, she was grateful for some local help. “Although I had the idea, I never could’ve pulled it off without Kathi Windheim’s help. She turned my crazy idea

YOLO COUNTY FAIR

It is with a heavy heart that after many meetings and much discussion the Board of Directors and Staff made the very difficult decision to cancel the 2020 Yolo County Fair.

This decision was not made lightly. The health and safety of our community is our top priority. This is a big disappointment to our Fair Staff, Board of Directors, Vendors, Volunteers, Local Organizations, Concessionaires, Exhibitors, Carnival Staff and the community but it is the right decision.

Planning for Fair takes months to produce this high-quality event. Due to the uncertainty of when restrictions for large public gatherings will be lifted, we are not able to make plans for the caliber of Fair everyone expects.

We wish everyone good health in the coming days. When we can safely open the fairgrounds to the public, we will continue with our tradition to schedule the events you enjoy and love - including the 2021 Yolo County Fair... "Wheel Be Llamazing".

Our pandemic plans must make space for young children

BY AMY GREENLEE

SPECIAL TO THE NEWS-LEDGER

Planning for how society should operate during a pandemic involves a large number of complex factors. And yet, midst all the discussion of reopening and regulation, there is one factor that remains largely unaddressed: young children.

In many of the official details and guidelines for moving forward, there is little to no discussion of children. Instead, there is an overwhelming preoccupation with the adult economy of restaurants, retail, workplaces, and entertainment. Little to nothing is said about the fate of children's spaces, such as playgrounds or play places, many of which seem to be closed for the indefinite future. Indeed, even when public places that could include children (such as parks, malls, zoos, etc.) are mentioned, they include blanket regulations (such as mask wearing and social distancing) that effectively exclude young children from participating. I should note that when I say "young children", I am specifically thinking of toddlers and preschoolers, who do not understand the importance of such rules, nor how to follow them correctly. In addition, even the small family gatherings that are now allowed appear to require all children (including babies and toddlers) to maintain social distancing--a large, maybe even impossible, ask of a young child who may be seeing a beloved grandparent for the first time in months.

The unspoken message of these rules, then, becomes one in which children are effectively not allowed to partake in any of these activities. And, as the unique needs of this age group continue to be omitted from each new announcement and update, it becomes hard not to read between the lines and infer that young children are viewed as an insignificant (read: unprofitable?) part of the planning. Furthermore, by making no allowances for children, the plans simultaneously exclude many primary caregivers from participation as well, as it becomes near impossible for a single adult to manage multiple children in this manner.

One of the only times children are directly mentioned is the conversation around school, which almost always comes to the conclusion that either distance learning will continue or schools will open with strict social distancing measures and masks. Yet both of these options still fail to account for young children (especially preschoolers and kindergarteners), who are developmentally capable of neither. In addition, they seem to assume that you can remove the socializing from school and still have the education, when in reality, the socialization itself is a primary educational objective for this age, and altering the way children are instructed to socialize during these early experiences will have significant, possibly harmful, impacts on them.

As they currently stand, the proposed plans seem to implicitly suggest that there is no place for very young children in the "new normal" of masks and social distancing, which is expected to continue for quite some time. While it may be true that the only way to keep this age group completely physically safe is to continue keeping them cooped up at home, this is not a sustainable way to keep them psychologically safe. Of course, the more likely reasoning for excluding young children from life outside the home is the potential risk they pose in spreading the virus to more vulnerable adults. And, while this is an important concern that needs to be addressed, it should not require the indefinite barring of all physical contact with their peers or extended family members.

What this compromise will look like is unclear. This is in no way an appeal to throw all caution out the window and release all children without restraint. Perhaps it involves encouraging families with young kids to select another family with whom they can have playdates, while still keeping vector creation to a minimum. Or maybe it means putting young students into small cohorts in which they can travel around and still have developmentally appropriate interactions. Whatever the possible accommodations may be-- at the very least--there needs to be more thoughtful discussion of our littlest (and most psychologically vulnerable) members of society.

ordinating Committee to enhance and restore riparian habitat along Putah Creek.

Some nominations in the APA California Awards require a win at the Section level, where the project, plan or work occurred, to be eligible for a Chapter Award. By winning at the Section level, the Yolo Habitat Conservancy will now be eligible for a higher, Chapter Award with the APA.

The Yolo Habitat Conservancy is a joint powers agency comprised of Yolo County and the cities of Davis, West Sacramento, Winters, and Woodland, whose mission is to conserve natural and working landscapes, and the species on which they depend, by working with local communities and conservation partners to coordinate mitigation and implement regional habitat conservation.

"This award is a testimony to our communities' commitment to smart planning practices that seek to balance the needs of our natural habitats and the needs of the development community," said Yolo County Supervisor and Chair of Yolo County Habitat Conservancy Don Saylor. "This conservation approach is the result of over twenty-five years of collaborative efforts by Yolo County, our four cities, and the University of California at Davis. This award shows that the hard work to put this plan together is already beginning to bear fruit."

The trick was to not look like you were reading.

Let me tell you, it's not easy. I once worked with an anchor in Atlanta who had not entirely mastered this. Last name, Michaels. A writer misspelled it in the teleprompter. The anchor opened the show: "Good evening. I'm Dave Mackles." Horrified pause as, behind him, the newsroom set erupted in joyful laughter. "MICHAELS!" he all but shouted. Too late. So much for credibility.

Anyway, getting back to my first-ever computer: Mom came to visit. As best I could, I tried to show her how my new 'contraption' (her word) worked. Not understanding why my electric typewriter did not suffice (hers still was manual); she shook her head. "Maybe you can sell it," she said doubtfully. "Uh uh!" I said firmly. "I have to master it. It's the future."

Yeah well. That was then, this is now, and I, myself, am obsolete.

A recent 'Zoom' medical appointment had me completely stumped. And, speaking of the future, Twitter has informed its employees all future work will be done from home. Microsoft is plugging its new "Team" software. The new software allows four people, logging in from home, to participate in a conference call. I think. As I say, I haven't mastered Zoom (or any other way to do this).

Some California counties, cautiously set to reopen, can't be sure what Covid 19 might do. With campuses/dorms known hotbeds for infection, fall classes at Los Rios and Sac State will be online-only. Some parents aren't getting kids' school-required vaccinations, worried they'll catch the virus at the doctor's offices. At least one West Sac doctor, now working from home, doesn't plan to go back to her office until August. Not a few parents wonder who'll watch their kids if they're ordered back to work and schools aren't open.

Enough already with this virus! Cross your fingers for a safe Covid 19 vaccine. Worldwide, the race is on.

Two more Individuals Charged with New Felonies After Being Released as a Result of California Judicial Council’s Statewide Emergency “0” Bail Schedule

This past month, two more individuals previously released from custody as a result of California Judicial Council’s Statewide Emergency “0” Bail Schedule were charged with new crimes. The “0” Bail Schedule became effective April 13, 2020, in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

As part of the efforts to decrease the jail population to mitigate the transmission and spread of COVID in the jail, a 31-year-old Woodland man, Humberto Tejeda, was granted an early release from custody on April 2, 2020, where he was serving a county prison sentence for auto theft.

Following his release, he was arrested on two separate occasions in the City of Woodland. Tejeda was arrested on May 1, 2020, for burglary, but was subsequently released as a result of the “0” Bail Schedule. He was arrested again by Woodland Police on May 18, 2020.

On May 19, 2020, Tejeda, was charged with multiple felonies by the Yolo County District Attorney’s Office. Tejeda was arraigned on May 20, 2020, on two separate Complaints in Department 1 of the Yolo County Superior Court. The first Complaint alleged violations of looting, burglary, and conspiracy stemming from a May 1, 2020, incident. The second Complaint alleged assault with a deadly weapon and battery causing serious bodily injury from May 10, 2020. He was also arraigned on two violations of post release community supervision and two probation violations. He is currently being held on $35,000 bail after pleading not guilty. He will next appear in Department 7 of the Yolo County Superior Court on June 2, 2020, for a preliminary hearing.

A second Woodland man, Chedepo Teh, age 22, was charged with multiple felonies after a “0” bail release. Teh was arrested on May 13, 2020, for burglary, then released on May 14, 2020, as a result of the “0” bail schedule. He was arrested again on May 15, 2020, for residential burglary, which is one of the exceptions that allows for the setting of a bail amount.

Teh was arraigned on May 19, 2020, in the Yolo County Superior Court on a Complaint alleging looting, second degree burglary, and first degree burglary. Teh remains in custody on $25,000 bail. He has entered a not guilty plea and his next court date is June 23, 2020, in Department 12 of the Yolo County Superior Court for a preliminary hearing.

Presently, the Yolo County jail is well below capacity and there have been no COVID cases.

Seed Library

The appeal of growing a home garden at a time like this is evident. Home gardens provide a connection to nature when many of us are now isolated in our homes working “virtually”. Gardens offer tangible, visible, delicious, and beautiful results for the labor invested. They provide an added measure of food security when some parts of our food system have incurred shortages.

Within a day of posting on the Gateway Park Little Free Library’s Facebook page about the new addition, the seed exchange was already being stocked by neighbors with vegetable, herb, and flower seeds. Early contributions included lupine, Red Russian kale, heirloom pumpkins, calendula, California poppies, romaine lettuce, Chinese long beans, and Genovese basil. My children couldn’t resist a packet of Rainbow Radishes we found deposited by a generous neighbor.

Whether we choose to grow food, medicine, pollinator plants, or flowers, let’s remember that gardens are community assets. They enhance the health of our local population and our local ecosystem. Please stop by the seed exchange to share your extra seeds and see what your neighbors have to offer! Happy growing.

Kindness

into something real. I wanted to make sure we got to the group of people that really needed the help and she took the time and had the know-how to help me do it.”

Offering Help
Jasmine Hale went on NextDoor and offered food for any neighbors who may have lost a job and may be low on funds or were just in need.
“I freaked out the first week, like pretty much everyone I think. But, after that initial dark week I recognized that I’m very fortunate to be sheltering in place in a nice home with lots of space, a big yard, plenty of food, and a good job I can work from home at. So, I tried an experiment to help lower my own anxiety and get outside myself and did my first act of kindness, making a brighten-your-day gift bag for a couple of local healthcare workers. Since then, I’ve kept up with my daily acts and it’s helped me tremendously. Sometimes they are local in nature, other times they’re for people and friends I know elsewhere.”
The requests were simple things: “One lady indicated she was older and afraid to go to the stores right now because she has lung issues. She only asked for carrots.”
“A single mom [who recently lost her job] with a little girl who only wanted some dinosaur shaped chicken nuggets and ranch dressing.”

And, of course, Lysol spray.
Of course, Jasmine gave more than they asked for, aiming for about a week's worth of food, “I bought a big bag with lots of fresh veggies and a few bags of groceries with all the foods my own little niece eats, Dino nuggets and ranch included!”
Why? “I have zero control over a pandemic, the economy, etc. but I can control how I respond to this and be a part of trying to ensure that the community I return to feels supported, not abandoned. I strongly believe that community who works together will ultimately allow us to recover in a better, faster way overall.”
With all the generosity going around, she reflects, “Americans are a kind and generous people, but we are also a culture that says people need to pick themselves up by their own bootstraps. So I imagine it’s not easy to ask for help.” It’s no wonder that offers to help on her NextDoor thread outnumbered requests by more than four-to-one.
Hopefully this serves to remind our neighbors who may be facing challenges right now, you are surrounded by a loving, generous community who is eagerly seeking for ways to help. We just need you to let us know what you need.

Jasmine also wanted to add a memory from late March, “When our grocery stores looked like ransacked post-apocalyptic scenes from Zombieland or Mad Max.” She had already been to multiple grocery stores in search of her daily English muffins (carbs are comfort foods!), “I had a full on melt down in an abandoned bread aisle at Nugget (on Greenhaven) and was muttering to myself the unspeakable ills I wished upon all the newfound English muffin hoarders!” After collecting herself, she thought, “Why not ask if the store could just save me a box or two when they come in?” She didn’t expect much, but a week later, she got the call she hoped for. “I know it’s completely inconsequential in all of this, but just as I was able to brighten other’s days, the Nugget brightened mine with two little boxes of muffins!”
