State Police Museum

BY PATTY ROY

The Massachusetts State Police Museum and Learning Center is chockfull of interesting facts and exhibits related to the agency’s nearly 160 year old history.

It’s housed in an appropriately dignified old building (the Whitinsville Bank Building) and easily found at One Memorial Square on Whittins Road, off Route 146, Whitinsville.

Learning about the inner workings of this state constitutary, is a fun way to spend a couple of hours or even a casual drop-in, cherry-picking what interests you. Mission, weapons, vehicles, technology, canines and uniforms are all there along with a sweet piece of Norman Rockwell nostalgia that makes for a great selfie.

“We believe we are the oldest state police agency in the country,” said tour guide MSP Sergeant Paul Belanger. “We argue that the Texas Rangers were formed before us, but they did not have police powers and were more like a militia.”

The Massachusetts State Legislature passed an act to establish the State Police in 1865.

The head of the state police was typically Civil War veterans with power on the part of municipalities, he said.

Most of the first group of employees at the newly established law enforcement agency were typically Civil War veterans with militia training, Belanger said.

“Their first duties were actually enforcing temperance and liquor laws,” he said.

Retired due to its awkward braking system, this Indian motorcycle is still considered a beauty.

That’s because the towns weren’t doing anything about this, such as no liquor sales on Sundays. This was likely due to a lack of manpower on the part of municipalities, he said.

In 1921 Gov. Calvin Coolidge signed the documents that created the Massachusetts State Police.

Gliding and smiling for a special group of youngsters

BY PATTY ROY

Liz Lefrancois of Auburn has been a hockey mom for a couple of years. She’s used to the early hours and the cold temperatures. Her eldest daughter, Claire, an eighth grader, has been a member of the Worcester White Hawks for several years and also plays junior varsity in Auburn.

Claire’s biggest fan girl, though, may not be her mom, but her younger sister - nine year old Elise who is autistic and suffers from a rare genetic syndrome called Fox P1.

The wonderful thing is, due to her mom’s enthusiasm and initiative, Elise now has her own opportunity to participate in ice hockey. She’s on the Worcester Snow Squalls, a team of special needs youngsters who meet up at the Horgan Ice Arena in North Auburn.

The Snow Squalls welcome individuals with intellectual, developmental and physical disabilities to the sport of hockey from any town.

It’s more fun for the kids to get out on the ice and glide even if it’s in a chair or a sled, Liz explained, to enjoy the sensation of skimming over the smooth surface and feel the slight chill on their faces. It’s a gentle and mild approximation of the sport of hockey.

“We don’t have kids at this point who are even ready to skate,” she said. Some of the players are able to put “grippers” on the feet so they can walk on the ice and eventually graduate to skates.

This leads a lot of people ask why not just have the kids do floor hockey?

“The main benefit of the program is that the players get peer interaction and support on a one-to-one basis,” Liz said.

the State Patrol that eventually became the State Police in the 1930’s, so the agency was moved from being detectives to the State Police Patrol. The pen used in signing is on display in the museum.

That led to the first recruit training troop. Belanger said he himself was a member of the 60th group training. They are now up to about the mid-80’s, he said.

Col. Alfred F. Foote, the Commanding General of the 26th Infantry Division was named as the first Commissioner of Public Safety. He retired in 1933 and a gold Badge presented to him by the officers of the department of public safety is on display by his portrait.

“A part of our mission is education. We have different levels of programs for different levels of learners,” he said.

There are coloring sheets for the smallest kids, microscopes for looking at fingerprint cards or a single strand of hair for the older ones.

Belanger was a fount of knowledge about the museum, saying that everyone was aware of what was going on.

An early version of the breathalyzer, one of the first technological attempts to crack down on drinking and driving reveals a machine that was capable of being manipulated to give a false reading – it’s good to know that improvements have been made.

There is a Wall of Remembrance devoted to the State Troopers who died in the line of duty from Patrolman William Mater who drowned in 1909 while attempting to rescue a man who had fallen through ice to Trooper Tamar Bucci who was killed in 2022 when a tanker truck slammed into her cruiser on I-93 when she was assisting a motorist.

A touching nod to the importance of K-9s to the State Police is the tribute to Frankie, a Belgian Malinois who was shot and killed while apprehending a violent suspect in Fitchburg in 2022.

The State Police is the premiere law enforcement agency in Massachusetts, Belanger said.

There are even some youngsters who due to sensory needs, need extra time to get used to wearing a helmet. (Practice this first at home, Liz recommends.) Her mom says Elise has always gotten a kick out of her time at the hockey rink, where she’s free to cheer as loud as she wants. “Nobody shushes you at a hockey game,” said Liz. She was pleased to report that someone who had run a special hockey program out of state got in touch and the Snow Squall parents were very interested in learning how that particular program worked.

Older sister Claire has also been an inspiration because she has brought on board some “really good” junior hockey coaches from her own teams.

“They’re kids that know hockey and they can go out to do one-to-one coaching,” Liz said. The young Snow Squalls get a chance to learn something in a different way from these patient and experienced older players. The junior coaches do things like setting up hockey drills using orange traffic cones that the kids love to be guided through. The Snow Squalls accept children ages 5 and over and are ready to work with all kids at their own pace. Right now, most of the players are aged 6 – 12 years.

It’s not however, your typical special hockey team, like some that are able to travel, Liz said. “We will work with you individually,” she said, but so much is about the opportunity to make connections. “My daughter has made friends with this one boy and they have so much fun going fast,” she said, happily. “Even his mom is smiling at the rink. The Snow Squalls motto is: We meet kids where they’re at.”

If anyone is interested in coming, but they’re not sure it’s for their child, Liz Lefrancois extends an open invitation to join the Snow Squalls at a practice to see if it’s something their child would enjoy. At this time, there’s no payment required since all the team’s ice time funding is donated from Wegman’s Food Markets. Practice jerseys have been donated by CCM.

Practices sessions are on Saturdays at 4 p.m. Feb. 24; March 9, 16 and 23 at Horgan Ice Arena 403 Oxford Street, North Auburn. This is the first session of the winter, so don’t worry, you haven’t missed any of the fun!

Worcester Snow Squalls is a Special Hockey Team, partnered with the American Special Hockey Association. Check out the Facebook page at facebook.com/worcesterpecialhockey/. To join the Snow Squalls, registration is required.

The team is also supported by a motivated group of coaches and off-ice volunteers.

Police K9 Biza and officers from the Auburn Police Department were thanked for their swift response in tracking and locating a missing child last month. On January 31, police were notified at approximately 10:30 p.m. that a 12-year-old child had left home roughly two hours earlier. The child was last seen in the Pakachoag Hill area of town.

"Due to the freezing temperatures and nature of the incident, numerous Auburn Police officers and troopers from the Massachusetts State Police converged on the area in an attempt to locate the child," read a statement released by the Auburn PD. "Detectives from the Auburn Police Department’s Detective Bureau responded to assist as well."

APD Officer David Ljunggren and his K9 partner Biza were also deployed, and the dog was able to pick up a scent. After tracking for over two miles, Biza led officers to an area where evidence indicated the child’s recent presence.

"Officers converged on this area and located the child a short time later. The child was reunited with their family and is safe," the police department’s statement read. "We are proud of the hard work put in by K9 Biza and are happy to report a positive outcome."

Running To Perfection

BY CHRISTOPHER TREMBLAY, STAFF SPORTS WRITER

Having a mix of talented veterans and a group of up-and-coming youth the Auburn winter track team is flirting with perfection. The Rockets currently find themselves sitting atop of the Southern Worcester County League (SWCL) sporting an unblemished overall record of 10-0.

“You never anticipate being undefeated. I am always nervous about schools like Uxbridge, Millbury, Grafton and Tantasqua,” Coach Steve Quitadamo said. “I’m a superstitious person and tell the kids to just worry about getting better as the year goes on and you’ll be happy by the end of the season.”

Having already secured 10 wins, Auburn has done so by taking out Uxbridge and Tantasqua, both previously undefeated to leave their record perfect. One of the big reasons the Rockets are having success this winter is their depth, something that they haven’t had too much of in the past.

“The biggest reason this year compared to past seasons is our depth in every event,” the Coach said. “I really don’t have to worry about certain events as I know that we are going to score points.”

What’s behind the influx of athletes flocking to the winter track team this year is mind boggling to the Coach.

“I really don’t know why, but the kids have seemed to be really into it this season,” the Auburn Coach said. “And the newer kids are realizing that track is actually fun.”

As the season continues along the Rocket athletes only need to worry about one person – themselves. The Auburn Coaching staff is there to help them reach their potential and as long as they improve they’ll be happy.

“It’s all about improving, don’t worry about anything else and everything will eventually fall into place,” Quitadamo said. “There is no such thing as a bad day, only good. Lessons are learned that will allow each athlete to find out what they need to work on throughout the year.”

Can they continue to participate at the top of their game and go undefeated, Quitadamo believes it is possible.

“If they continue to do what they have been they’ll be ok,” he said.

“I continually tell them just to stay humble and don’t expect anything and things will fall into place. Stay humble and we, as coaches, will push you in the right direction to get to your potential.”

Staying humble and following the Coaches advice may eventually lead the Auburn winter track team to that elusive undefeated season in the long run and hopefully that extends into the post-season.
Students from Bryn Mawr and Paka-dzoag Schools donned their Captains of Kindness to make a February visit to the Auburn Police Department extending kindness to the Police officers that help keep them safe. Free Tax Prep Services

WAC’s Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program opened on January 30th and will run through the tax deadline of April 15th. Requests for free tax preparation by WAC are accepted for individual taxpayers or households making $64,000 or less within Worcester and 45 surrounding towns in Central Massachusetts. Through VITA, IRS-certified volunteers prepare taxes and specifically look for tax credits the household may be eligible for, such as the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC), Child Tax Credit (CTC), Circuit Breaker Tax Credit, and others. Utilizing the free tax preparation service allows families to retain their full refund, avoiding typical preparation fees which can often cost hundreds of dollars.

Appointments for face-to-face tax preparation with IRS-certified volunteers are available to book by preferred time slot and are now open. Appointments will begin the last week of January and be held at WAC’s main office at 18 Chestnut Street, Worcester. New for 2024, additional in-person appointments will also be available in Southbridge, Webster and Leicester.

Visit https://wac.net/vita/ to book an appointment or access online tax preparation services. WAC’s Resiliency Center Director Maydee Morales said, “We look forward to meeting people where they are and expanding our appointment locations this year to include opportunities in Southbridge, Webster and Leicester. Additionally, we are really focusing on integrating services for VITA clients. We hope to have our Community Navigators on site to assist with other financial services, including accessing SNAP, RAFF and other community resources. VITA sites are a low-cost and high-return activity offering up 60 to 1 return on investment, bringing $60 million in tax credits back to taxpayers and their communities.”

A fully online tax preparation process is also available again this season should you be unable to come in person or prefer not to.
Luke Bucks A Family Rule

"Luke! It's okay. It's just your old spot," I reminded on that peculiar day in January. The catchphrase "New Year, New Luke" announced itself during a family lunch. I stared in disbelief at a newly minted Luke. My son, Ben, muscular and brotherly, had grabbed him by the collar to coax him back to his spot. Yet a simple tug somehow turned into a bizarre power struggle. What was wrong? Luke had put on his brakes and trembled with a fear that makes me shudder, even in retrospect. "I'm not-going-there." Tail fastened between legs; he shook as though we had just placed him in solitary confinement with King Kong. What was happening? Was Luke suddenly afraid of his brother?

"What's the matter, Luke?" We cajoled him with baby-talk. "Look at Luke's spot! It's so comfy!" But he wrestled out of Ben's grip and dashed to his bed in the dining room where he sat, stoic and determined. "I'm going to choose my own spot from now on." I stood dumbfounded with a slab of meat, a reward that did nothing to motivate him. Instead, he rested his head over his paws and sulked. "I don't need to stay at that dumb spot anymore. I'm over it." We speculated. Had a kitchen chair inadvertently fallen over on Luke during his puppyhood to traumatize him? Or was his choice to ditch the spot prouder, perhaps even territorial? -- "I'm not answering to my big brother. He thinks he's the boss. Well, I'm the boss of myself." I came to learn that Luke's decision was rooted in something even more remarkable. Nevertheless, we needed to rule out sibling rivalry. My husband and I encouraged Luke to sit at his spot to see if he would comply with us, not Ben. "Go ahead," we gestured. "Sit at your spot, Luke." The same behavior resumed. He trembled. He retracted. He dashed back to his bed. One time he even popped onto the rug at the front door. "I'm picking my own spot." Not only did Luke insist on choosing his own spot, but he also refused to participate in any conversations about it. "Do you think he's afraid of his spot? Maybe we should try a new..."
Are More Homeowners Selling as Mortgage Rates Come Down?

If you’re looking to buy a home, the recent downward trend in mortgage rates is good news because it helps with affordability. But there’s another way this benefits you, it may inspire more homeowners to put their houses up for sale. Over the past year, one factor that’s really limited the options for your move is how few homes were on the market. That’s because many homeowners chose to delay their plans to sell once mortgage rates went up.

An article from Freddie Mac explains: The lack of housing supply was partly driven by the likelihood lower rate existing homeowners had. These homeowners decided to stay put and keep their current lower mortgage rate (known as rate lock-in), rather than move and take on a higher one on their next home. Early signs show these homeowners are ready to move again. There were more homeowners putting their houses up for sale, known in the industry as new listings, in December 2023 compared to December 2022, up about 9%. Here’s why this is so significant. Typically, activity in the housing market cools down in the later months of the year as some sellers choose to delay their moves until January rolls around. This is the first time since 2020 that we’ve seen an uptick in new listings this time of year. This could be a signal that the rate lock-in effect is easing a bit in response to lower rates.

What does this mean for you? While there isn’t going to suddenly be an influx of options for your home search, it does mean more sellers may be deciding to list. A reduction in interest rates could alleviate the lock-in effect and help lift homeowner mobility. Interest rates have recently declined, falling by a full percentage point from October to November 2023. Further decreases would reduce the barrier to moving and give homeowners looking to sell a new sense of urgency. And that means you may see more homes come onto the market to give you more fresh options to choose from.

As mortgage rates come down, more sellers may re-enter the market – that gives you an opportunity to find the home you’re looking for. Connect with The Marzeotti Group or a real estate agent so you’ve got a local expert on your side who’ll help you stay on top of the latest listings in your area.

spot? “We pondered a solution. Meanwhile, we noticed that each time we uttered the word SPOT, Luke would turn his head away and threaten to leave the room, as though to say, “I’m not talking about this.” Clearly, the subject was sore.

Luke had his reasons. He was about to enlighten me on them a few weeks later. My mother, one of Luke’s favorite people, had been eating a dish at the kitchen island. Oblivious to our rules, she complimented Luke, despite that he sat at her heels. Grammy loved Luke unconditionally. He looked up at her dish, then at me, and away, ashamed. Something in his expression struck me. He had learned that begging was socially unacceptable and impolite. Luke had outgrown his spot because he had grown closer to his family. He wanted to be included in our eating circles. Luke was a contributing family member! The drag away from the family table, then, felt belittling, counterintuitive to his emotional intelligence. Luke understood how we felt about begging but we failed to understand how he felt about being excluded.

From now on, Luke has a place at the family table, and it’s right at our feet.

Prayer

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us, and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil (intention), Amen.

If you pray three times a day, three consecutive days, you will receive your intention, no matter how impossible it may seem. Praise and Thanksgiving please the Heart of God.

Avoid tapping into retirement savings early

If you want to make a big purchase, such as a new car or a piece of property, or you were faced with a large, unexpected expense, such as a major home or auto repair, would you have the funds readily available? If not, you might look at what may be your biggest pool of money — your 401(k) or IRA. But should you tap into these accounts well before you retire?

Maybe not — and here’s why:

• Less money in retirement — The more money you invest in your retirement accounts, and the longer you keep it invested, the more you’re likely to have when you need it most — when you’re retired. Consequently, taking out sizable amounts from these accounts before you retire could be costly, as it would disrupt the benefits of compounding that can be achieved by holding investments for the long term.

• Possible bump into higher tax bracket — The money you take out from your traditional IRA and 401(k) is taxable in the year of withdrawal. So, if you withdraw a significant amount of money at once from your traditional IRA or 401(k), you could be pushed into a higher tax bracket, at least for one year.

• Tax penalties — If you take money out of a 401(k) or traditional IRA before you turn 59½, you could face a 10% tax penalty, although some exceptions exist. Penalty-free withdrawals can be made for several reasons, including for education and medical expenses, first-time purchase of a home (up to $10,000), after the birth or adoption of a child (up to $10,000), and more (see irs.gov/taxtopics/tc537). With a Roth IRA, which is funded with after-tax dollars, you can withdraw contributions — but not earnings — at any time, for any purpose, without incurring penalties.

Given these issues, how can you avoid dipping into your retirement accounts when you’re faced with a financial need?

One possibility is to take out a loan from your 401(k). Unlike a 401(k) withdrawal, a loan is neither taxable nor subject to tax penalties. Also, the interest you pay on a 401(k) loan goes back into your account. Still, a 401(k) loan has its drawbacks. If you leave your job, you’ll likely have to repay the loan in a short period of time if you don’t have all the money to repay it, the loan will be considered in default, so you’ll owe taxes and the 10% penalty if you’re younger than 59½. But even if you don’t leave your job and you do repay the loan, you’ll still have taken away money that could have potentially kept growing within your tax-deferred account. As mentioned above, as your money compounds, you’ll want to minimize disruptions.

Building an emergency fund is another way to gain access to cash. Such a fund should contain at least six months’ worth of living expenses, with the money kept in a liquid, low-risk account. It can take time to build a fund of this size, so it’s never too soon to start putting away money for it. To avoid the temptation of dipping into your emergency fund, you’d ideally keep this fund separate from your daily spending accounts.

Explore all your options before tapping into your IRA or 401(k) early. Keeping these accounts intact as long as possible is one of the best moves you can make to help build your future retirement income.

High mileage engine oil - is it worth it?

Q. My 2014 Mazda CX-9 has 63,000 miles and I faithfully change the full synthetic 5W-20 oil and filter every six months. I never reach 5000 miles during that six months or I would change it at that interval. I use “regular” synthetic oil. I’m reading that it might be time for the “high mileage” engine oil version. Supposedly it has additives for aging seals. (If that’s the case, why don’t have those additives in all versions?) The Ford 3.7L V-6 Duratec in this SUV is dynamite. No oil leaks and I love its performance. (No towing or heavy loads). What are your thoughts on switching to the high mileage? Pros vs. cons? Also, I thought high mileage oil was just more wear and tear. However, by now you must have seen this before. Have you heard any? And yes, I understand Mazda’s “joystick” infotainment setup has its detractors.

By John Paul

A. At first, I thought high mileage oil was a marketing ploy, but after some research it does have its benefits. It will help with aging engine seals, the additives condition the seals, not swell them up like some pour additives do. That being said at ten years old and using good oil, I’m not sure you need it, perhaps switch in the 75,000-100,000-mile range. The only negative of high-mileage oil is it costs a bit more. As for the latest CX-9, a very well-made vehicle and the new six-cylinder engine performed quite well during my road testing. There are a couple of powertrain choices, plug in hybrid, mild hybrid, and conventional engine. The mild hybrid and PHEV are too new to know how they will do. The conventional inline six-cylinder turbo engine, also new for Mazda, seems very solid. The interior is very comfortable and unlike many bigger SUV’s, then handling it quite good. The newest Mazda is not without some problems with at least two recalls since its introduction.

Q. My son is visiting from overseas and borrowed my car to drive to Pittsburgh to visit friends. The car is a 2012 Audi A4 with 90,000 miles, no significant issues to date, though it has been burning a bit more oil of late. The check engine light came on in Pittsburgh. The light is solid, no noticeable issues with driving yet. He did find a parts store and they came up with codes: P2187 and P2279. Am I taking major risks allowing him to drive back home, provided there are no noticeable performance issues, and the light is not flashing? I would of course take the car in for diagnostic to my local trusted mechanics once he is back.

A. The two codes relate to fuel mixture, perhaps a leak in the intake air before the throttle plate, vacuum leak at the intake manifold or even a dried out vacuum hose. The most common issue is with the PCV system, sometimes called an oil separator in VW/Audi engines. This could also explain your engines’ increased oil use. Since the car is running normally chances are it is a minor fuel issue and should be okay. In the worst case, there could be some stalling.

Q. Ford continues to innovate in its quest to make trailering easier and less intimidating for truck owners through its Pro Trailer Assist and in the past year, the ability to automatically hitch your truck to a trailer hitch. While these systems are available on the F-150, SuperDuty trucks, Expedition – I have been following every year for when they would expand these options to the Explorer or Escape. Any rumors that this could happen soon?

A. I asked that question about a year or two ago with engineers from Ford and they said it was in the plans with the next major upgrades to the Explorer but not likely in the Escape. They hinted at that time that budgetary concerns were an issue, focusing more on electric vehicle development.

Q. I am wondering if you can recommend a good steering wheel lock seat belt lock to protect my 2019 Honda CRV? The rash of car thefts has me concerned so I thought a lock of this type would be an effective way to deter auto thefts. The main advantage is, it is easy to use and will not mar any of the surfaces like a bar type of lock would. I have read some of the reviews of this type of lock. My main concern is that I could install it and then cannot get it to unlock, or it could damage the seat belt receptacle, so it will not work either. I have read complaints about both conditions.

A. The other one is the seat belt could be damaged and so the belt alert continues to chime. What do you think?

Like all of these devices (cane locks, steering wheel locks and armored ignitions), they are a deterrent, and hopefully a thief would see this and move on. The weakness in this product is the seatbelt. The device that I have seen has a rigid plastic case and strong cable, but it still connects to a fabric seatbelt. Keep in mind even then the steel cable can be cut with battery grinder or hydraulic cutters. Adding additional security is a personal choice and certainly could work, but I would also follow the advice of the police, park in well-lit areas, remove valuables and lock the car.

New London's Ledge Light

New London, Connecticut's Ledge Light, was one of the last lighthouses built in New England. Its distinct French Second Empire style came about at the request of the wealthy homeowners along the shore who wanted the structure to keep in harmony with the elegant appearances of their coastal estates. Unfortunately, many of these fashionable homes were destroyed in the hurricane that swept through New England on September 21, 1938. The lighthouse was built in 1909 to replace the inefficient New London Harbor Light. It was originally called the Southwest Ledge Light, but the name was changed because a light in New Haven had already claimed that moniker.

The fourth-order Fresnel lens held an incandescent oil vapor lamp that could be seen up to eighteen miles away and was rotated by a clock mechanism that required winding every four hours. During the Hurricane of 1938, Howard B. Beebe was on duty as keeper. The waves came through the second-floor windows of the three-story building, forcing him and his assistant to take refuge in the cast iron light tower that sits on the mansard roof. After the hurricane, Coast Guard crews were stationed at the light to keep it lit until it was automated on May 1, 1987. The day the light went automated was a monumental event for one of the keepers, who wrote in the log, “Rock of slow torture. Ernie’s domain. Hell on earth—may New London Ledge’s light shine on forever because I’m through. I will watch it from afar while drinking a brew.”

The ghosts that haunt the light are few, but they make themselves known — especially the ghost of John “Ernie” Randolph. Randolph is said to have lived at the light with his wife. As the legend goes, Randolph’s wife became very depressed about living in the middle of the bay with little contact from the outside world and soon sailed off with the captain of a Block Island ferry. Poor Ernie was so distraught that he climbed to the top of the light, slit his own throat, and dove into the waters below. His body was never found, but from that moment on, Ernie’s ghost began haunting the Ledge Light. When the Coast Guard became keepers of the light in 1939, cadets constantly witnessed doors opening and closing on their own, and had their bed covers tugged on or wrenched off them as they tried to sleep. Televisions would mysteriously come to life without anyone to switch the units on. The foghorn was also prone to ethereal antics. Even on the clearest of days, the horn would begin to wail. When inspected, it was always found to be in perfect working order. When keepers went out to swab the decks around the light, they would find them inexplicably already washed down. Boats docked and tied securely would suddenly break free and start drifting out to sea. The 2009 multi-award-winning WGBY documentary Things That Go Bump in the Night: Tales of Haunted New England tells of an account by Guardsman Bill Rhodes Jr.

Young Mr. Rhodes was stationed at the light from August 1979 to January 1980. One night, while on watch, Bill heard creaking and groaning from the upstairs door to the light room. He was sure he had latched the door, which was part of his duty. When he checked out the noise, he saw the door wide open. It took a lot of force to unlatch the door and thrust it open, as it was designed to withstand hurricane-force winds. New Hampshire EVP expert Karen Mossey once caught a voice on her recorder that was not Ernie’s. Karen asked if there was anything she could do for the spirits. When she played back the recording, she heard a voice loud and clear say, “Help me, I’m cold.” She was later told an account of a vessel that crashed on the ledges near the lighthouse. Unfortunately, the father and daughter aboard succumbed to the ravages of the sea before they could be saved. A keeper heard his name called several times while descending the ladder from the light tower. This was rather disconcerting to the man, as he was the sole occupant of the light at the time. A woman and her children staying at the light got a visit from the ghost of Ernie. She was suddenly awakened by something at the foot of her bed. As she focused her vision, she distinctly saw a semi-transparent figure of a man in a rain hat and slicker. The gaunt apparition stood over six feet tall and sported a beard. Her children were also witness to the maritime spirit that decided to pay them a visit.

The lighthouse can be seen from shore, or toured through a cooperative program with the University of CT’s Project Oceanology Program.

Sheriff Evangelidis Celebrates Many Milestones at Webster Regional Resource Center

On January 25th, 2024, Sheriff Lew Evangelidis and the Worcester County Sheriff’s Office Webster Regional Resource Center celebrated the graduation of three students who passed the High School Equivalency Test (HSE). The event also featured a keynote speech by Chief Probation Officer Nilza Sylvestre, who delivered an impactful message. Moreover, the event marked the retirement of the center’s founding Director, Byron Titus, who served for nine years.

Clients become involved with the Regional Resource Center by voluntarily seeking services or through a court order. In addition to educational opportunities, Regional Resource Center Staff assist individuals who have been or are currently involved with the justice system. Various services include assistance with finding employment, housing, and health insurance. The center also offers programs, including addiction recovery and mental health assistance.

Byron Titus, Director of the Webster Regional Resource Center, opened the graduation ceremony by welcoming guests and congratulating the three graduates on completing years of hard work.

Titus reassured the graduates that, “The Regional Resource Center staff will always be here to support you. This center will be here until you are settled and totally satisfied with whatever you choose to achieve.”

Nilza Sylvestre, Chief Probation Officer at the Dudley District Court, was the ceremony’s guest speaker. In her remarks, Sylvestre recalled the struggles of her own family growing up. Sylvestre explained to the crowd that she is a first-generation American, the daughter of two immigrants. Sylvestre became the first in her family to not only graduate high school but also to earn a bachelor’s and master’s degree. Sylvestre concluded her comments by reassuring the graduates that they can achieve their goals as they transition from the Webster Resource Center and on to their next endeavors.

“The staff at the Webster Regional Resource Center can only help those who want to help themselves,” commented Sheriff Evangelidis. “You all have proven your dedication to furthering your education and elevating your life. Education is unassailable, and this achievement cannot be taken from you. Today is a milestone and should set the tone for the rest of your lives.”

Thursday’s graduation was a turning point for the Webster Regional Resource Center. Byron Titus, longtime Director of the center, retired from his role at the Sheriff’s Office. After nine years, Titus bid farewell to the last round of clients who completed the program under his guidance.

Evangelidis referenced Titus’ departure during his remarks. The Sheriff recalled a conversation about building such a center in Webster over a decade ago.

“It was Byron who shared my dream of what this center could be,” commented Evangelidis. “My goal was to make this center a community center, a true asset to southern Worcester County. We built this place from the ground up. Our team has and will continue to serve the residents of Worcester County.”

Over the past decade, Titus has been responsible for the center’s expansion. What started as only 12 client referrals from probation, has amounted to over 170 referrals and services provided to hundreds of walk-in clients. Titus has continually advocated for the addition of programs and services. Under his leadership, the Webster Resource Center staff have positively impacted the lives of countless community members.

Titus has handed over the reins of the center to Erica Lajiardos, who previously served as the center’s Assistant Director.
