SACRAMENTO, CA (MPG) - Trey Olson, 12, was first in line for Vic's reopening. He waited under gloomy skies and sporadic rain from 9 a.m. until the doors of Vic's Ice Cream opened at 11 a.m. on Saturday, Jan. 2.

Trey said he has been coming to Vic's since he was just a few months old. His father, Ted Olson, also has deep ties to the shop, having worked there as a

Supervisors Elect Rodriguez Chair, Hume Vice Chair

Sacramento County News Release

SACRAMENTO COUNTY, CA (MPG) - The annual vote to elect a new chair and vice chair of the Board of Supervisors was held on Tuesday, Jan. 13. This year's elected chair is Supervisor Rosario Rodriguez of District 4, and Supervisor Pat Hume of District 5 was elected vice chair.

"It is an honor to serve as chair of the Sacramento County Board of Supervisors in 2026," said Supervisor Rodriguez.

"I step into this role with a clear focus on results, respect and responsibility. Many of our residents are struggling, and they deserve a county government that acts with urgency and delivers measurable outcomes. As chair, I will run disciplined, productive meetings and demand results, accountability and follow-through on every commitment we make," she added.

Appellate Court Rejects Delta Tunnel Financing

Delta Counties Coalition News Release

SACRAMENTO REGION, CA (MPG) - The Delta Counties Coalition (DCC) welcomes the opinion by the Third District Court of Appeal, which upheld the lower court's ruling that the State of California lacks legal authority to issue billions of dollars in bonds to finance the proposed Delta tunnel project without explicit legislative approval.

This decision affirms what Delta communities, counties and local agencies have raised for years: that a project of this scale, cost and consequence cannot be advanced through administrative maneuvering or broad interpretations of decades-old statutes.

The court made clear that the Department of Water Resources exceeded its authority by attempting to classify the Delta tunnel as a "modification" of the State Water Project, rather than what it plainly is: a massive new conveyance facility with far-reaching impacts.

For the counties and residents who live and work in the Delta, this ruling is an important step toward transparency, accountability and lawful decision-making. The proposed tunnel would fundamentally alter Delta land use, threaten local water supply reliability, place additional pressure on fragile ecosystems, and expose ratepayers and communities to escalating financial risk - all without clear authorization from the Legislature or any water supply benefits for affected regions.

The court's opinion underscores a basic principle: if the state wishes to pursue a project with an estimated - and questionable - price tag of $20 billion and decades-long consequences, it must do so openly, with full legislative scrutiny and public accountability. Delta communities should not be asked to bear the environmental, economic and social costs of a project that has yet to demonstrate clear benefits or a lawful funding path.

While proponents have suggested the ruling does

Late December Storms Deliver Much-Needed Water Supply

California Department of Water Resources News Release

SACRAMENTO REGION, CA (MPG) - The Department of Water Resources (DWR) recently conducted the first snow survey of the season at Phillips Station.

The manual survey recorded 24 inches of snow depth and a snow water equivalent of 5 inches, which is 50 percent of average for this location.

The snow water equivalent measures the amount of water contained in the snowpack and is a key component of the Department of Water Resource's water supply forecast. Statewide, the snowpack is 71 percent of average for this date.

Today's results are welcome news for water managers who rely on the statewide snow surveys to make water supply decisions for the year ahead. California's statewide snowpack had been lacking in early December with above-average temperatures and very little storm activity.

Recent storms have turned that around and provided a significant boost to the snowpack and the state's water supply.

"The dry conditions and warmer temperatures in early December delayed our snow-building season, but the return of storm activity, especially in the last week, helped to build a solid base for this year's snowpack," said Angelique

Fabbiani-Leon, State Hydrometeorologist for the Department of Water Resources.

"Thankfully, the recent storms that reached the state were cold enough to provide necessary benefits for the snowpack and our water supply. While California is in a better position now, it is still early in the season and our state's water supply for this year will ultimately depend on a continued cadence of storms throughout winter and early spring."

The Department of Water Resource's electronic readings from 130 stations placed throughout the Sierra Nevada indicate that the statewide snowpack's snow water equivalent is 6.5 inches, or 71 percent of average for this date, compared to 115 percent on this date last year.

On average, the largest snow-producing months in the Sierra Nevada are January, February and March.

Drought and flood always marked the California climate, but extreme whiplash between wet and dry is becoming more pronounced, not just year to year but often within the same season or month.

"It's great to see so much fresh snow in the Sierra following a relatively dry December," said Department of Water Resources director Karla Nemeth.

"More than any other factor, the rain and snow that falls in these critical winter months dictates how much water can be delivered to Californians and farmland statewide. We make the most of what Mother Nature delivers with advance planning that enables Forecast Informed Reservoir Operations and groundwater recharge."

Major reservoirs statewide are currently 123 percent of average thanks to recent precipitation on top of three consecutive years of above-average snowpack conditions.

On average, the Sierra snowpack supplies about 30 percent of California's water needs. Its natural ability to store water is why the Sierra snowpack is often referred to as California's "frozen reservoir."

Data from these snow surveys and forecasts produced by the Department of Water Resource's Snow Surveys and Water Supply Forecasting Unit are key factors in determining how the Department of Water Resources manages the state's water resources.

The Department of Water Resources conducts four media-oriented snow surveys at Phillips Station each winter near the first of each month, January through April and, if necessary, May.

The next survey is tentatively scheduled for Feb. 3.

not end the project, it undeniably raises serious questions about its viability.

Just last year, the governor unsuccessfully attempted to tack legislation onto the state budget that would have bypassed many hurdles for the tunnel, and his representatives at that time confidently told the Legislature that they would prevail on this matter in court.

This calls into question this project's other significant problems. At a minimum, this court decision requires the state to pause and reconsider whether continued pursuit of the tunnel is prudent, lawful or aligned with California's broader goals for sustainable water management, climate resilience and regional equity.

science-based water solutions that protect the Delta, support local communities and provide reliable water supplies statewide, without sacrificing the rule of law or the voices of those most directly affected.

give one voice to the Delta, advocating on behalf of local government and the 4 million people throughout the Delta region. ★ who often felt more like neighbors than patrons.

Sweet Treats Return as Vic's Reopens

"Craig always made you feel seen," said his son, Matthew Rutledge. "He just appreciated everybody for who they were."

Craig Rutledge died in March 2024 at age 73. The cause of death was cirrhosis of the liver. He had been hospitalized roughly two weeks before his death.

"It was actually really shocking," said his sister, Karen Tzikas. "Nobody really expected it."

Craig Rutledge began working at Vic's while attending Kennedy High School and never stopped serving generations of Sacramento residents. Born Dec. 26, 1950, to Ash Rutledge and homemaker Joyce Rutledge, he grew up not far from the ice cream shop. He attended John Cabrillo Elementary School and San Brannan Middle School.

"He always dropped everything to help his neighbors and family," Tzikas said.

The Land Park Community Association (LPCA) said it was shocked and saddened by Rutledge's passing. A longtime board member of the LPCA, Rutledge was credited with quietly strengthening the neighborhood.

"The community may not know everything he did to support our neighborhood, but because of Craig Rutledge's time and devotion, William Land Park is a better place to live," the association said in a statement.

Community events in Land Park and beyond often featured free Vic's ice cream.

"He was a soft-spoken guy who cared deeply about the community," said Mark Abrahams, a former president of the Land Park Community Association.

Former Sacramento Mayor Darrell Steinberg also paid tribute to Rutledge.

"Vic's is a Sacramento institution that continues to create good times and memories for so many Sacramento families, including mine," Steinberg said. "The city and I will keep Craig and his family in our prayers."

Steinberg is not the first local politician to have a fondness for Vic's. The restaurant has long been a favorite dining spot of lifelong Land Park resident and 2006 Democratic California gubernatorial candidate Phil Angelides.

Vic's was also a favored destination of the late U.S. Rep. Robert Matsui and his wife, current U.S. Rep. Doris Matsui. Former U.S. Rep. John E. Moss Jr., who represented Sacramento's 3rd District, was also a longtime patron. He died Aug. 15, 2022.

The Sacramento Bee reported that "the future of Vic's had been one of the most intensely followed sagas in Sacramento's food scene since owner Craig Rutledge passed away in March 2024. By August 2024, the property had been put up for sale."

That uncertain future changed when members of the Grifone family stepped forward, intent on preserving Vic's legacy. The new operating group consists of Carlo Grifone and his daughter, Samantha Grifone; Scott Matrevec; and Craig Rutledge's son, Matt Rutledge.

Carlo Grifone is an owner of the local pizza chain Giovanni's Old World New York Pizzeria, located at 5924 S. Land Park Drive in the South Hills Shopping Center. Samantha Grifone will oversee the day-to-day operations of the ice cream parlor.

Matrevec is an owner of Frog & Slim on 16th Street and an angel investor with Sacramento Angels, a group of experienced entrepreneurs and executives that has invested in more than 100 companies

Gina D'Arcangelo said she drove by on Saturday and Sunday, but the line looked too long. She added, "A Land Park institution and so worth the wait. Hot fudge sundaes. Coffee ice cream for me. Kathy had traditional vanilla." Courtesy Photo since its founding in 2000.

Vic's and Brew Bird share an entryway and a beer-and-wine license, connected inside while retaining separate exterior doors. Together, they represent a thoughtful blend of nostalgia and reinvention.

The adjoining space has reopened as Brew Bird Coffee & Creative, a modern café and pottery studio serving Camellia Coffee Roasters coffee, Bella Bru pastries, and beer and wine, alongside a paint-your-own pottery experience fired in an on-site kiln. Brew Bird's pottery options range from $35 mugs to $45 planters, with materials and studio time included.

For co-owner Samantha Grifone, the pottery concept had long been a quiet ambition.

Craig Rutledge originally opened the coffee shop in 2013, about a year after Ford's Hamburgers, a landmark California burger joint, was forced to close following an ADA lawsuit.

Ford's, located about a mile and a half from Vic's, was indeed out of ADA compliance, lacking sufficient wheelchair access to its restroom. Owner Hank Vereschzagin said he could not afford the necessary renovations to the more than 60-year-old building.

A year later, Vic's faced a similar challenge. Rutledge purchased the beauty salon behind the ice cream parlor and cut a doorway between the two businesses to create an ADA-compliant restroom. He converted the former salon into a coffee shop.

Meanwhile, Sacramento attorney Scott Johnson, who had filed thousands of disability discrimination lawsuits, later pleaded guilty to filing a false tax return on income earned from those cases.

The reopening drew friends, neighbors and former employees, including Ted Olson. One notable absence was Vic's first female employee, though her family came during the first week.

Cynthia Borcich said her daughter Angela became Vic's first female server in 1992, starting at age 14. She worked there while attending C.K. McClatchy High School and Sacramento City College before choosing culinary school in San Francisco instead of a four-year university.

Jeff Cole, who is married to Angela's younger sister Jenny, said Angela got her start at Vic's.

"Angela has an extremely successful catering business in Hawaii for the rich and famous," Cole said with pride. "And she got her start making melted cheese hot dog sandwiches on rye bread at Vic's in 1992."

Cole also recalled always ordering a side of potato chips with his sandwich and said Vic's once had a secret menu that included a Hawaiian drink and an Elvis milkshake made with vanilla ice cream and a scoop of peanut butter.

"You can't beat Vic's famous hot dog sandwich," Cole said. "The dogs are split, served between slices of bread and griddled."

Mentioning Vic's tangy red sauce, made from ketchup, mustard and Worcestershire sauce, brought an even bigger smile.

"I loved dipping my chips and even my sandwich in it," he said, noting that the exact proportions remain a secret.

Vic's general manager Dave Gilson has been with the business for nearly 25 years, starting as a scooper before moving into management about 12 years ago.

"Families like Cynthia Borcich's come together here, and generations are going to keep doing that," Gilson said. "It's the experience when you walk through the door. It brings you back. A lot of your happiest memories happened here; after a game, a school play, just being together."

John Fowler said he first came to Vic's in 1948 and has been a patron ever since. A lifelong Sacramento resident, Fowler attended Holy Spirit, California Middle School, C.K. McClatchy High School, Sacramento City College and Sacramento State, graduating in 1971.

"I'm happy they reopened; no big changes, and they kept the menu," he said. The menu is still displayed on a black letter board with white lettering.

The shop does have a fresher, lighter look, with pale green striped wallpaper adding brightness and modern tile adorning the counter.

After a 13-month closure and a change in ownership, Vic's Ice Cream has reopened at 3199 Riverside Blvd., looking both familiar and refreshed.

The counter appears shorter, but the missing end stool allows a wheelchair user to sit comfortably at the counter. A new ADA-compliant restroom has also been added.

The classic parlor remains intact, from the black-and-white checkered floor to the in-house ice cream recipes and long-time staff. Subtle upgrades, including new stools, tabletops, freezers and finishes, were added during the renovation.

"It's the same recipe, same high-quality ingredients, same person making it," Gilson said, noting that mint chip is still expected to be the top-selling flavor. Gilson still makes the ice cream in-house.

Over its lifetime, the shop has won numerous awards for its ice cream, including seven consecutive gold medals at the California State Fair. ★

California Homeowners Could Qualify for Grants for New Roofs and Fire Safety

By Levi Sumagaysay
CALMatters.org

SACRAMENTO REGION, CA (MPG) - Some homeowners in areas of California with high wildfire risk could eventually get money for new roofs or to build fire-resistant zones around their properties under a new state law that went into effect Jan. 1.

The Safe Homes grant program is designed to help low- and middle-income homeowners with fire mitigation. People who qualify could use grants to create 5-foot ember-resistant zones around properties, also known as Zone Zero, as required by law in some areas. The program will also contribute toward costs for fire-safe roofs.

The state's Insurance Department, which is responsible for implementing the program, is working out the details around eligibility, the amount of and the distribution of grants.

It is now developing an application portal that it hopes to have ready by March, said Michael Soller, spokesperson for the department.

The insurance

department will be handling all the details of the grants, said Mike Dayton, chief of staff of Assemblymember Lisa Calderon, the Los Angeles-area Democrat and chair of the Assembly Insurance Committee who wrote the law, and has so far secured $3 million in the state budget to get the program started.

Soller said homeowners who have policies with admitted insurance carriers or the last-resort FAIR Plan and who live in high-risk areas will have to meet income limits set by the state housing department to be eligible for the grants, whose amounts have not been determined. Communities, cities and counties with mitigation projects could also apply for grants.

He also said the insurance department plans to advocate for additional and ongoing funding for the program.

Another source of funding could be the federal government, including the Federal Emergency Management Agency, Soller said. But Gov. Gavin Newsom recently tried to meet with FEMA to talk about disaster aid related to the Los Angeles County fires and was unsuccessful.

The California Board of Forestry and Fire Protection recently extended the finalization of rules regarding Zone Zero buffers around properties to the first half of next year. The rules are expected to take effect for existing homes in 2029. ★

Students in California Struggling Most with Math

Find a Super Tutor News Release

SACRAMENTO REGION, CA (MPG) - While the Christmas break is upon us, many students will be studying at home over the festive period and may be wondering how to receive a little extra support for the subject they find the hardest.

With this in mind, education recruitment agency Find a Super Tutor investigated the subjects that students in the US are struggling with the most.

The research analyzed the total number of Google searches for 118 subjects, applying 13 different search combinations for each, such as "help with mathematics" and "chemistry tutoring". Then, the ranking was calculated based on the subjects with the most to least average Google searches per month across the nation and in each state.

Mathematics was revealed to be the subject that California was struggling with the most, with a monthly average of 18,256 Google searches inquiring about help with the subject. Ranking as the subject with second-highest number of inquiries was Programming, with an average of 7,473 searches per month.

Following in third was Spanish, with an average monthly search count of 7,228, whereas English Language followed in fourth with an average of 7,083 searches per month. Rounding out the top five was Calculus, with a monthly average of 1,995 searches.

Mathematics was revealed to be the subject that students were struggling with the most across the US, with a monthly average of 125,929 Google searches inquiring about help with the subject.

Other subjects that students struggled with were SAT Prep, with an average of 7,552 monthly searches, and Calculus, with an average of 6,857 monthly searches, whereas Japanese completed the top 10, averaging 6,718 monthly searches.

Commenting on the findings, Joshua James, director of Find a Super Tutor, said,

"There are strong patterns among the subjects that students are struggling with the most. Most of the subjects fall under either the STEM or languages category. Some of the hardest school subjects to learn include mathematics and other scientific disciplines such as programming, information technology, chemistry and calculus. These subjects can be challenging for students because they involve abstract concepts, logical reasoning, and require learners to memorize large amounts of information.

"For instance, calculus requires a solid foundation in algebra and trigonometry, and without this, students can quickly fall behind. Similarly, programming and IT demand not only technical knowledge but also the ability to think algorithmically and troubleshoot complex problems. Students who struggle in STEM often benefit from interactive tools like coding simulators, virtual labs, and personalized tutoring platforms, which allow for a more hands-on and tailored learning experience.

"Language subjects also pose challenges, but of a different nature. English and foreign languages such as Spanish, Japanese, and American Sign Language require mastery of vocabulary, grammar, and cultural context, all of which can vary widely from a student's native language."

"Japanese, for example, has multiple writing systems and a syntax that significantly differs from English, while ASL relies on spatial reasoning and visual cues that are not intuitive for everyone. Even English, often assumed to be straightforward for native speakers, contains complex grammar rules and idiomatic expressions that can confuse learners.

"Online support for language learning has become highly sophisticated, with resources like language exchange communities, immersive audio-visual content, and AI-powered apps such as Duolingo offering real-time feedback and personalized practice routines. These tools can significantly enhance engagement and retention, helping students overcome the hurdles these subjects often present.

"Regardless of what subject you or your child is struggling with, there is always support available. If you need help beyond what online resources may be able to offer, hiring a part-time tutor can be the perfect solution. Tutors are typically experts in their chosen area and can provide specialized, high-quality support to improve grades and understanding of the subject." ★

Board chair responsibilities include the following: presides over the board meetings; the vice chair assumes the role in the chair's absence or inability to act.

If the chair and vice chair are absent or unable to preside, the members present will select a member present to act as temporary chairperson; acts on procedural matters or questions; recognizes a member of the board desiring to speak on an item; is entitled to vote on all matters before the board, participates in discussion relating to any matter, makes motions without relinquishing the chair, and seconds any motion without relinquishing the chair; sits on other boards/commissions as a representative of the County of Sacramento and is the point of contact for questions from the public regarding the meetings (i.e., coordination of resolutions/presentations and general questions not specific to a district, etc.). Kings Korner

By V.G. Harris

What a difference a week makes!

Losers of seven straight games and looking like cellar dwellers, the Kings went to a youth movement that saw the hometown boys win four consecutive games and nearly made it five straight as they fell to the Portland Trailblazers for the third time this season.

The mini winning streak had a cold water in the face effect for many pundits and fans, as the Kings easily handled the Rockets, Lakers, Knicks and the Washington Wizards.

Even more surprising was the way the Kings put away the competition, as they won by double digits in each of the 4 wins.

A shot in the arm? You bet it was, and it should give the organization a moment of pause as they reassess what they have regarding talent that resides on this team.

Right in the middle of this euphoric 4-game run was none other than 6'11" big man Dylan Cardwell, that has come out of nowhere to become a fan favorite. Just 24 years old, the Kings have stumbled onto a diamond in the rough, and no one on this team plays with greater enthusiasm than Cardwell. Comparisons are being made of Dennis Rodman, as Cardwell bounces down the court with arms uplifted, energizing the crowd and getting fans on their feet.

Not known for his scoring, Cardwell went undrafted a year ago, and the Kings signed him to a 2-way contract for this season. Smart move and one that's already paying off.

Cardwell might not get 20 points per game, but his affection for blocking shots and playing ferocious defense is just what the Kings needed to get them back.

The question will be as the trade deadline approaches, will the Kings realize what they have in Cardwell and value him to the point of not including him in a trade. Don't do it! And by the same token, do not trade Precious Achiuwa!

For the first time in many years the Kings can put a big lineup on the floor and it's showing results.

As the center piece of the Kings Domantas Sabonis was sidelined with a knee injury, coach Christie had no choice but to use both Achiuwa and Cardwell side by side, and the results were astounding.

Not to be forgotten is rookie Maxime Raynaud who although not as impressive, is coming along, and I'm hopeful the Kings hang onto Raynaud as well.

The idea of blowing up this team in my opinion was never a good one, and I am in favor of the Kings either finding a trade that will add a topflight scorer, or worst case scenario, hold down the fort, work with the existing squad, and make your move in the next draft.

OKC and others have proven that the draft can be your friend. If the Kings can begin to assess talent, there is a real possibility that the upcoming draft, that is predicted to be a talent laden one, can produce another player of DeAaron Fox quality.

Every reason to start getting excited Kings fans.

Domantas Sabonis is back, and will Christie have the wherewithal to play Cardwell and Sabonis at the same time. Is it just a pipe dream to have Achiuwa, Cardwell, and Sabonis all playing on the court at the same time? Wow, what a rebounding trio, and with scorers like Murray, DeRozan, and Lavine to compliment the big men, what might this team look like.

Say your prayers for coach Christie that the talent fairy will tap him on the shoulder and give him good common sense to see what he has right before him.

As I have said many times before, look no further than your bench to find talent, and stop sending quality players away where they make teams better.

The Sacramento Kings really are better than their 12-31 record reports, and the second half of the season really does matter.

Scott Perry, don't make hasty decisions, and let this team continue to gel while giving the youth of the team a chance to show what they're made of.

If you haven't gotten out to a game there is no better time than right now. These guys will get you on your feet over and over again!

Go Kings and let's tweak things and by all means not blow it up!

All the best!

Homelessness Crisis Remains One of Newsom's Biggest Political Liabilities

By Dan Walters, CALMatters.org

While delivering his final State of the State address and proposing his final state budget last week, Gov. Gavin Newsom clearly sought to neutralize an issue that has haunted his political career for more than two decades and could torpedo his hopes of becoming president: homelessness.

First, a bit of history.

Just months after being elected mayor of San Francisco in 2004, Newsom unveiled a plan he said would clear city streets of homeless people in 10 years. Fourteen years later, while running for governor, Newsom declared that homelessness in San Francisco had "never been worse."

He said eradicating homelessness would be a high priority and promised to appoint a homeless "czar" who could cut through red tape and intergovernmental friction to get the job done. Later, when pressed by reporters over the czar pledge, he snapped, "You want to know who's the homeless czar? I'm the homeless czar in the state of California."

Despite that self-appointment and devoting almost all of his 2020 State of the State address to homelessness, the number of unhoused Californians continued to rise to record levels. As it did, Newsom began blaming local governments for not spending state homelessness grants effectively and threatened to withhold annual funding.

However, in 2024 State Auditor Grant Parks excoriated Newsom's own California Interagency Council on Homelessness for failing to effectively monitor and coordinate homelessness programs — even though the state had spent more than $20 billion during Newsom's governorship.

He later reorganized the council and last year it issued a glossy "Action Plan for Preventing and Ending Homelessness." Newsom hailed it as "not just a report of our investments, but a directive for continued accountability and action towards specific quantifiable goals."

It listed multiple things that should be done to alleviate the homelessness crisis, but never mentioned how its lofty goals should be achieved nor said anything about how the state's deficit-ridden budget would pay for them.

In last week's State of the State address, Newsom sang the political version of the World War II tune, "Ac-Cent-Tchu-Ate the Positive," cataloguing his accomplishments during the last seven years, including progress toward eliminating homelessness.

"When I began as governor, there was no homeless plan, no mental health plan and certainly no housing plan," Newsom told legislators. "There was no accountability and little investment. The responsibility fell to cities and counties, with little interest from Sacramento."

Newsom ticked off the efforts he had made and bragged that, "Early data, just compiled, shows that the number of unsheltered homeless people in California dropped 9% in 2025," while "the nation saw an 18.1% overall increase in homelessness. Our investments are paying off."

He could not, however, resist another jab at local officials, saying he is "providing counties what they've been asking for: the predictable funding for housing and substance abuse treatment. No more excuses — it's time to bring people off the streets, out of encampments, into housing, into treatment. Counties need to do their job."

County officials took umbrage. The California State Association of Counties, in a statement, complained that Newsom's budget shifts the financial burden for several health and welfare programs to county governments and fails to protect them from federal reductions.

The organization also cited the new budget's omission of an annual bloc grant for homeless programs, and the administration's stalling the delivery of cash from a past allocation, "which was approved by the Legislature 18 months ago."

While Newsom cites a 9% drop in homelessness, if true it would be from a base of nearly 200,000 Californians without homes. There are still plenty of squalid encampments to be videotaped and featured on ads attacking a potential presidential candidate named Newsom two years hence.

Social Security Matters

I'm Divorced; Can I Get Benefits from my Ex-husband?

By Russell Gloor, AMAC Certified Social Security Advisor

Dear Rusty: After 16 years of marriage, we were divorced. I have never remarried, but he has. When he starts collecting Social Security (he is 64 now and still working), is it true that I can claim ex-spousal benefits or does that go to the current wife? How would I find this info? Signed: A Divorced Spouse

Dear Divorced Spouse: The fact that your ex-husband has remarried has no influence on your ability to collect benefits based on his record. If you are eligible for ex-spouse benefits (because you did not remarry), you can get those benefits regardless of whether his current wife collects benefits on his record. In other words, both you and his current wife can both collect spousal benefits from your ex-husband's earnings record.

Your eligibility for an ex-spouse benefit is determined by comparing your own SS retirement benefit amount at full retirement age (FRA) to his — if your own SS benefit at your FRA is less than 50% of your ex's FRA benefit entitlement, and you were married to your ex for more than 10 years, are not currently married and are at least 62 years old, then you can get a "spousal boost" (an amount added to your own Social Security retirement amount). In fact, if you have been divorced for over two years, you can get an ex-spouse benefit even though he is not yet receiving his own SS retirement benefit.

Be aware, however, if you claim any Social Security benefit (both your own SS retirement amount and your ex-spouse "spousal boost") before you reach your full retirement age, the monthly amount you get will be reduced according to how much before your full retirement age you claim. Spouse and ex-spouse benefits reach maximum at your full retirement age but are reduced if claimed earlier than your full retirement age. Claiming your benefits as an ex-spouse will also result in you receiving your own SS retirement benefit (reduced if you haven't yet reached FRA).

I suggest you contact Social Security at 1.800.772.1213 to make a telephone appointment to evaluate whether you are entitled benefits as an ex-spouse. If your own SS retirement benefit at your FRA is less than half of your ex's FRA entitlement, you will be. To apply for those benefits you will need a copy of your divorce decree (and perhaps your marriage certificate), and your ex-husband's Social Security number (if you do not have his SSN, you can provide his date and place of birth and his parents' names, and SSA will likely be able to locate your ex's SS record).

SSA will be able to tell you what your total monthly benefit as an ex-spouse will be when you meet with them, at which point you can decide whether to claim your benefits early or wait until your FRA to achieve your maximum amount as an ex-spouse.

Finally, the United States will follow through on its NATO commitments.

That'd be the cheeky interpretation of President Donald Trump's announcement, via Truth Social, that he wants the U.S. defense budget to be $1.5 trillion. This would represent a stunning 50% increase over the current budget and put the U.S. right around 5% of GDP, the target level that NATO countries recently adopted at Trump's insistence.

The details and follow-through will matter, but on its own terms, the Trump declaration is of epic significance.

Such a historic buildup would meet the moment -- it's never made sense that the U.S. would enter a period of heightened risk of great power conflict at a time when it has difficulty replenishing its missile stocks.

It would match the predictions of a president who enjoys throwing his weight around. If Trump wants to speak loudly and carry a big stick, it requires the resources to build and maintain the stick.

And it would match his vision of a world-class military. You can't have a Golden Dome -- Trump's project for an enhanced missile defense -- or a Golden Fleet -- his notion of a next-generation navy -- without a Golden Defense Budget.

The scale of spending contemplated here is truly astounding. A $500 billion increase would roughly match the total annual spending of all non-U.S. NATO countries. The percentage increase would be the highest since the Korean War and double the biggest annual increases of the Reagan years.

Yes, We Need a $1.5 Trillion Defense Budget

"We still talk about the Reagan buildup," Secretary of War Pete Hegseth said in a speech last month, "and my kids and yours will someday talk about the Trump buildup."

The Trump proposal would not just be a down payment on that promise, but a big step toward fulfilling it.

If our military is highly proficient -- as demonstrated in the Venezuela raid -- it also doesn't have the materiel to wage a protracted major war.

Defense analyst Mackenzie Eaglin of the American Enterprise Institute has long been ringing the alarm. She recently noted that during the short Israel-Iran war, we fired 150, or one-quarter, of our THAAD missiles, exceeding our annual purchase rate by three times. In the Red Sea, the Navy fired more Tomahawks in January 2024 than it bought in all of 2023.

These shortfalls, as Eaglin points out, are especially disturbing when compared to the building capacity of our adversaries. Whereas the Russians make more than 300,000 artillery shells a month, we make only 40,000 155mm shells. "Beijing builds six naval combatant ships," she writes, "for every 1.8 ships the U.S. builds."

Even The New York Times -- not known for beating the drums for more defense spending -- devoted a splashy editorial last month to the sorry state of our military-industrial base.

In his new book, "War and Power," scholar Phillips Payson O'Brien relates how wars between great powers are usually not won by brilliant battle plans, or by the commitment or proficiency of the troops. Rather, it is productive capacity -- and the ability to degrade that of the enemy while maintaining or increasing your own -- that makes the difference.

The Nazis weren't going to win the Battle of Britain when the Brits were producing twice as many aircraft as Hitler.

On top of this, a nation needs to make shrewd choices about what it is building (the Nazis also had the wrong planes for the Battle of Britain -- bombers with payloads that were too small and fighters with limited range).

The U.S. needs to make sure that it is not overinvesting in the weapons systems of the past, although a defense budget on the scale that Trump is discussing would relieve some pressure from these choices. We could very well have our traditional subs and jet fighters, and our cutting-edge drones, too.

Trump's taste for gilding everything can be over the top. It'd be a national service, though, if he manages to make the U.S. defense budget golden.

City Launches AI-Powered Website Search to Help Residents Find Information Faster

City of Sacramento News Release

SACRAMENTO, CA (MPG) - The City of Sacramento has launched a new artificial intelligence feature on its public website designed to help residents find information more quickly and easily.

The city's website search page now includes an AI-generated summary at the top of search results. The tool provides clear, concise answers by summarizing information from multiple city sources, reducing time spent searching and improving transparency and usability. Users can ask full, plain-language questions and receive responses before clicking through individual pages.

"This new feature is about making city information easier to access and easier to understand," said Darin Arcolino, chief information officer for the City of Sacramento. "By summarizing content from across the city website, we are helping residents get the answers they need faster while supporting the City Council's Streamline Sacramento effort."

The feature builds on lessons learned from the city's internal SacGPT proof of concept and reflects ongoing collaboration between the Information Technology Department and other city departments.

City staff who have tested the tool say it is already improving how information is found with the public.

"As someone who works closely with residents and the development community, I have seen how helpful this tool can be," said Matt Hertel, assistant director of the Community Development Department. "The AI search summaries make complex information easier to find and understand, which saves time and improves the overall customer experience."

City officials say the AI search enhancement supports broader efforts to modernize services and streamline how the public interacts with local government.

The city expects the feature to be among the first of its kind launched by a local government agency, reinforcing Sacramento's role as a leader in responsible, practical uses of artificial intelligence for public service. ★

California Museum News Release

SACRAMENTO, CA (MPG) - California Museum Executive Director Amanda Meeker announced that she will retire in the summer of 2026, after more than a decade in the role and 28 years of service to the Museum. A respected cultural leader, Meeker has dedicated her career to advancing the Museum's mission to educate people about California's rich history, diversity and culture.

During her tenure, Meeker has played a central role in solidifying the California Museum's position as a trusted civic institution, expanding its reach, modernizing its exhibitions, strengthening its public-facing programs and deepening its commitment to inclusive, community-centered storytelling. Under her leadership, the Museum has become known for elevating underrepresented histories and tackling contemporary issues shaping California today.

"Amanda has been pivotal in establishing the Museum's identity as a center of storytelling representative of the diverse people and cultures that make up the Golden State," said Anne Marie Petrie, Chair of the California Museum Board of Trustees. "Her passion for public education and her steady leadership has advanced the Museum's ability to share knowledge, spark dialogue, and inspire civic engagement."

Meeker joined the then-Golden State Museum as its first official employee ahead of its opening in 1998, after having supported its development as a student intern. From the start, she helped shape the Museum's vision, developing exhibitions and programs that reflected California's complex social, political and cultural history. Since being appointed executive director in 2015, she has guided the Museum through a period of unprecedented growth and change, increasing its relevance to the communities it serves.

Throughout her career, Meeker has been known for her collaborative leadership style, fostering strong partnerships with educators, community organizations, artists, scholars and civic leaders across the state. Her work has reinforced the Museum's role as a place of historical storytelling and as a dynamic forum for public engagement.

"It has been a privilege to steward the California Museum's mission over the years, working alongside dedicated staff, board members, educators and community partners who believe in the power of history to inform and inspire positive change," Meeker reflected. "The Museum's strength comes from the people whose stories it uplifts, and I'm confident it will continue to grow as a space where Californians see themselves reflected for generations to come."

The California Museum Board of Trustees has engaged executive search partner Isaacson Miller to help identify Meeker's successor, someone who will build on her legacy while leading the institution into its next chapter.

"Amanda's retirement marks the close of a remarkable career. The Board expresses its deep appreciation for her vision and integrity that helped define who we are today," Petrie remarked. "Her legacy of leadership will continue to inspire those who follow her footsteps in maintaining the museum's mission. But most of all she will be missed for her kindness and incredible capacity to care for all of us here and her community."

As she prepares for retirement, Meeker looks forward to traveling and pursuing personal projects, while remaining an advocate for museums and public history.

Missing a Tooth?

Here Are Your Options

By your local dentist Dr. Ashkan Alizadeh, Master at Academy of General Dentistry

Losing a tooth is more common than most people realize, whether it's from decay, gum disease, or an accident.

But even one missing tooth can affect more than your smile. It can make chewing more difficult, lead to shifting of nearby teeth, and even change the shape of your face over time.

The good news is, there are several ways to replace missing teeth. Understanding the options can help you make the best decision for your health and comfort.

1. Do Nothing (Not Recommended)

While it may seem easier to leave the space empty, this can cause nearby teeth to drift, throwing off your bite and leading to more tooth wear or jaw pain. Once teeth move out of proper alignment, it becomes harder to clean, increasing the risk of cavities and gum disease. It also becomes more challenging to replace the teeth if you wait too long to replace the teeth, so it's best not to wait too long.

2. Removable Partial or Full Denture

A removable denture is a simple and affordable way to replace one, several, or all missing teeth. These appliances are taken out at night and cleaned daily. While they can restore your smile and chewing function, they tend to cover a large portion of the mouth and can sometimes feel bulky or less secure.

3. Fixed Bridge

A bridge is a permanent option that connects an artificial tooth to the natural teeth on either side of the gap. This provides a more natural look and feel than a removable denture. However, the neighboring teeth must be shaped to support the bridge, and it's not ideal if too many teeth are missing.

4. Dental Implants

Dental implants are the most advanced and long-lasting option. An implant is a small titanium post that replaces the root of a missing tooth and supports a crown, bridge, or even a full denture. Implants look, feel, and function like natural teeth, and they help preserve the jawbone beneath the gums. Implants aren't for everyone, though. Factors like bone quality, health conditions, and medications can affect whether they're the right choice. Your dentist can take X-rays and discuss if implants are a good fit for you.

The Bottom Line

Replacing missing teeth is about more than appearance. It's about maintaining good oral health, proper chewing, and a confident smile. Whether you need to replace one tooth or a full set, there's a solution that can fit your needs and lifestyle.

If you're ready to explore your options, schedule a consultation to see what's best for you.

A native of Kinshasa, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Malango and his family spent 10 years in Malawi as

He began at Salem State University, where he scored 17 goals in 19 appearances and earned both MASCAC Player of the Year and Rookie of the Year honors on the way to a conference title. Mayele earned his first call up to the Malawi National Team for World Cup Qualifiers in September 2025 and recorded an assist in his debut. He later joined The Flames for two international friendlies in November, scoring his first goal against Lesotho on Nov. 18.
